FROM THE MAINE FRONTIER.

Sepulchral—Seven Miles Ahead and 150 Years Behind—A Half Day Amid Log Cabin Homes—Visit to a Log School House—The Cow as an Element in Architecture—Yoking the Hog to Keep Him Out of a Hole in the House—Liability of the Yankee Driver to Get Left in New Brunswick—The Land of Fritters—The Grand Falls of the St. John, Second to Niagara, Alone.

[From the Special Travelling Correspondent of the Lewiston Journal.]

JUST ACROSS THE LINE, Sept. 21st.

An Aroostook "potato hole" looks like an old-fashioned tomb. It is scooped out of a large knoll in some field with the entrance at the more abrupt side. An Aroostook man without a cellar has to excavate a potato sepulchre. The overflow is stacked up in the open field. Two years ago the fields were full of those stacks.

By a ride of seven miles from Caribou, we went back in civilization a century and a half. We have driven through eight uninterrupted miles of stumps, and poverty. After viewing the loveliness of the Aroostook valley, we have penetrated the wilderness and in Letter F Plantation have viewed what I hope is one of the least civilized spots in New England.

Huts

Soon after leaving the flourishing farming town of Limestone, the traveller enters an uncleared land. The trees have been cut down and burned in tracts near the road, but the stumps remain. In a journey of eight miles we did not see a single cleared field and saw only a few potato patches among the stumps. It is a land without bricks. The soil is so even and so mellow in all Aroostock, that there isn't clay enough to make a chimney and all the bricks must be imported at an expense of $12 to $15 per thousand. So it is a common sight to see a stove funnel sticking out of a house roof. In most communities the brick chimney predominates; but in Letter F, the sheet iron smoke stack is universal. The insurance companies, by the way, refuse to take risks on buildings constructed in this style. It is said they burn no more frequently than brick-chimneyed buildings.

We came near losing ourselves in the wilderness and everybody we met

Seemed Lost.

We had considerable difficulty in finding out what the name, title or designation of the place is. The inhabitants are, nearly all, French Canadians. We asked one what the place was and he shook his head—"No unerstan'." The next man we asked said he didn't know what they called it. He asked his wife and she said "Letter F." The name should be changed to "Letter-rip." This seems to be the motto of the population. Everything is at loose ends—from hogs to babies. They put yokes on their hogs, so they can't crawl through the big chinks they leave open in their log houses. There are one or two framed houses in Letter F, but there is not a saw in town. We base this statement from observation. The houses are not clapboarded and the boards project at all ends, having been nailed on just as they came from the mills. Roof and walls present a like appearance. One wonders how all the boards happened to be a little too long and that none were too short. But along the greater part of the road, there were no buildings but log houses and barns,—and such log houses and barns! Some of them were made of hewn logs; but the greater number were built of the trees just as they came from the forest, without even the loss of bark.

Top-Dressing.

Some of them were chinked with straw and some were tightly battered with cow manure. There were great holes between the logs in some houses—so great we could plainly see eyes and noses staring through them. On some of these log huts, the roofs are thatched with straw; on others great strips of hemlock bark are used; still others are covered in with "long shingles" of spruce—what we would call slabs. The log barns were not more than half made and few of them had doors. Wood-sheds are made wholly of thatch and bark. Hogs were running at large,—their heads nearly as long as their bodies—and their bellies nearly as lean as their snouts. The hogs were yoked and so were a few geese. Large flocks of children, which played among them did not have yokes. Indeed they didn't have much of anything but tow-hair and

Bare Legs.

The air was frosty; we wore thick gloves and overcoats; and these little girls had nothing on them but loose cotton gowns and the albuminous soil of Aroostook. A few cows were in sight, and these were tied; for there are no fences. In one of the better sections of Letter F, we saw a log meeting house and asked a traveller whom we met, of what denomination it might be. His reply was "It's a kinduver Methodist, I guess." The Methodist seemed to have a healthful influence, for there were a number of neat places in its neighborhood.

time," regretfully says an aged New Brunswick man, whom we approach on the subject. The hotel has an old English piano and the landlord is John Bull, himself. Our impression is that poultry has a remarkable longevity in this country. Placards state the hotel is under the patronage of the Duke of So-and-so and Lords, among them Lord Dufferin. The placard is headed "Superior to Niagara." An excursion party of women have come up in hay-racks from down river to view the falls.

The St. John makes a terrific tumble. It fairly makes one dizzy to stand on the swaying suspension bridge and look at the madly roaring cataract. The spray from the falls moistens your face when fully a quarter of a mile distant. The first leap taken by the river is straight down eighty-six feet. A mighty volume of water falls this distance. A flood of it strikes a huge projecting rock and is hurled fiercely back in air. Below the cataract is a river of froth. Such a thick mist arises from the churned waters that it is impossible to see the base of the fall. A grist mill bestrides a great crevice in the ledge on the west and a torrent of water pours under it. Great jagged rocks form the sides of the fall. The grandeur of the canon into which the river is precipitated is indescribable. The whole waters are forced through a channel in the solid rock not over fifteen feet deep in some places. The Titanic masonry rises vertically 150 feet from the water. How the dwarf birches which grow on these upright walls of ledge secure a root-hold, is incomprehensible. By paying ten cents for the use of some stairs, there was one spot where we could creep down to the water's edge. We went down and bathed our hands in the St. John at the bottom of the canon. The river makes an awful sweep through these narrows. The look up the precipice is awe-inspiring. The rocky gorge is nearly half a mile long. The suspension bridge crosses the chasm at a height of 130 feet from the water. It is supported by iron cables from four stone towers.

Grand Falls is a busy place in the winter. Hordes of lumbermen start hence for the logging camps. Now the little town is sleeping.

WEBSTER'S HOME.

The House at Marshfield—The Tomb of The Defender of the Constitution—Quaint Epitaphs in the Old Graveyard The Story of the Dike—President Arthur at the Webster Centennial.

To-day at Marshfield, Mass., will occur a memorable celebration—the centennial of Daniel Webster's birth. Webster was born at Salisbury, (now Franklin,) N. H., Jan. 18th, 1782, and was educated at Dartmouth College. But his home after he reached the years of maturity and fame, was at Marshfield. The celebration of Webster's hundredth birthday causes a revival of Websterian literature and reminiscence. Webster died Oct. 24th, 1852, thirty years ago. The celebration occurs a few weeks before the real centennial, for convenience's sake. Pres. Arthur, who was accorded a public reception in Boston, Wednesday, this morning will proceed to Marshfield, via the Old Colony railway. On his arrival at Marshfield he will be welcomed to the Webster place by Mrs. Fletcher Webster and the town officers, and with them he will take breakfast. Next will come brief services at the Webster tomb, at which Hon. Stephen M. Allen will make a brief address, prayer will be offered and a portion of Longfellow's "Psalm of Life" will be sung. Then the President will become for a short time the guest of the Ancient and Honorable Artillery Company, occupying one of their marquees. In his various movements at Marshfield, 500 members of the Grand Army of the Republic will serve as his special escort. The company and society will dine in adjacent tents, which, after the eating will be thrown into one, the President to be with the society. Among the speakers on the occasion will be Gov. Long, President Arthur, Sec'y. Frelinghuysen, ex-Sec. Evarts, President Bartlett, of Dartmouth College and others.

In the Visitors' Record, preserved at the Webster Place, is this pathetic entry: "Ashburton Webster, the last male descendant of Daniel Webster, bearing his name, died in New York city, aged thirty years, Jan. 22d, 1879. * * * The old house burnt on Feb. 14th, at half-past 3 o'clock A. M., 1878. All gone." On the place occupied by the old house, has been erected a charming modern villa, with seven gables and wide piazzas; the spirit of hospitality, not frightened away by the flames, still reigns, and a modern house, though not so large as the [illegible] will be called "Liberty Hall" when Daniel Webster was alive, thirty years ago, as he stood on his house-top, he could say with Alexander Selkirk, "I am monarch of all I survey." As far as his eye reached extended his domain. Two thousand goodly acres, covered with woodland and orchards, with hay fields and tillage, with undulating uplands and wide, flat salt marshes, constituted a patrimony of which any man might well be proud.

In those days it was a long drive to Boston by stage, but the sea came up to the garden wall, and his yacht, laden with provisions, could anchor within three-minutes' walk of the house. The house itself, an ante-Revolutionary mansion, had been enlarged, and with its thirty rooms offered accommodation for a small army of visitor. The country life of the great statesman is familiar to every one—his popularity with all the neighbors, his junketings, his fishing excursions; the best picture of him represents him with pole in hand, with his famous white hat, dressed for out-door life. After his death the house became a Mecca for pilgrims. The first visitor to inscribe his name on the record was Edward Everett, and the date was August, 1853. One summer there were several thousand who paid their respects to the memory of the defender of the constitution. It is an interesting record; from all over the world men came—Cuban planters, Russian princes, Polish counts, and the untitled nobility of our own land. One of the autographs is that of Jefferson Davis. Occasionally an enthusiastic person would break out into impromptu poetry and inscribe the tribute of his praise. In October, 1853, Charles Blanchard wrote:—

"He gave his time, his talents, and his great Heart to his Country, and left a name perishable only with our PLANET."

Webster's Tomb.

Daniel Webster's tomb, where he and his descendants are buried, is in an enclosed lot a short distance back of the house, in an old Pilgrim graveyard. A number of simple marble cenotaphs commemorate the various members of his family. Until within a year or two his features were perfectly preserved, but the last time his coffin was opened, the virtue of the embalming, probably owing to the action of the air let in, had entirely failed, and now only a little dust remains. The Pilgrim graveyard on the hill is a peculiarly solemn spot; the old tombstone, standing at every angle, broken by time and covered with moss, are legible only with difficulty. It was here that the first governor of Massachusetts was buried. Under a quaint coat-of-arms is this inscription:

The Hon'ble Josiah Winslow, Gov'r of New Plymouth, Dyed December ye 18, 1680, aetatis 52. Penelope ye widdow of Gov'r Winslow dyed Dec. ye 7, 1703, aetatis 73.

An Incendiary's Vandal Torch.

The burning of the Webster House was a cru shame. It is supposed that the fire was ince diary. About one o'clock of a cold St. Vale tine's morning, a man who had a grudge again the coachman crept up to the L and applied t fatal torch. There were about four feet of sno on the ground, and when the fire was discover it had made such headway that there was hope of stopping it.
