"PEACE."

BY MRS. L. S. HARRIS.

"Peace—my peace I give unto thee,"
Not as gives the world to thee,—
Calm repose, as found in Jesus,
Sensual dreamings ne'er can be.
Cast aside each grievous burden,
Lift again the drooping head;
Grief's dire load no longer borrow,
Jesus bore it in thy stead.

Earthly peace, how weak, unstable,
E'en amid earth's loveliest scenes!
Clouds may gather ere the morrow,
Banishing joy's golden dreams;
Hopes may wither in their budding,
Friends may fall or fickle prove;
Trusts betrayed, with sad repinings,
O'er the grave of hopeless love!

Like a phantom earthly pleasure
Beck'ning stands to lure thee on,
And the sparkling cup extending,
While a gush of witching song
Lulls the reason. Pause! consider!
Does it satisfy the soul?
Pause they who its depths have tasted.—
Nay—who've reached its very goal?

No; for dreams that lured them onward,
Like the desert's mirage fair,
Still elude the tired pursuer,
Or but gross attractions wear;
And for peace the wearied dreamer
Vainly turns to earlier years;
Cons o'er joys untinged by glory;
Childhood's smiles and childhood's tears.

But the "peace" the cross has purchased
Ends not when life's race is run;
Gilds with gladness each to-morrow,
Ere the haven of bliss is won.
Narrow is the path He's chosen
For the ones His grace makes free,
But 'tis fraught with peace eternal,
For He says, "I leave it thee"!

He spent his time a drinkin syder.
Together he worked a cow and muel,
And never sent his boys tew skewel.

THE OLD HOMESTEAD.

Nessun maggior dolore,
Che ricordarsi del tempo felice,
Nella miseria. —Dante.

Ever when Spring returns
In the footsteps of Winter chill,
When the snow from the woodland path retires
The ice from the joyous rill,
My thoughts go back to the dear old home
That stands on the breezy hill.

Unchanged to other eyes
The home of my heart may be,
With its verdant banks and orchards fair,
But oh, the change to me!
For the voices, save one, are mute,
That filled it with joy of yore,
And the sounds of the feet I love to hear
Are heard in its halls no more.
Afar from the ken of mortal ear,
They are treading the voiceless shore;
The forms of the loved ones lost,
I never shall see them more.

Rise in the watches of the night,
Visions of grief and pain;
My mother's stately form
Bends o'er her favorite flowers,
And I love to think of her wandering
In the amaranthine bowers.

The gate is opened wide,
As it stood on that Winter day
When he, our brave and beautiful,
On his war-horse rode away.
Far, far adown the road
His dog ran by his side,
And then crawled back, with drooping crest,
Shivered and whined and died.

Such omens smite the heart
With a keen and sudden pain,
And we felt that our joy and pride
Would never return again.
Hence I never more shall climb
The well-remembered hill,
Though the house still crowns the verdant crest
And the flowers are springing still.
The loved ones of other days
Are beyond the ice-cold river,
And the voices that poured their joyous lays
Are silent, alas! forever.

MAY.

Now that the winter's gone the earth hath lost
Her snow-white robes; and now no more the frost
Candies the grass, or casts an icy cream
Upon the silver lake or crystal stream;
But the warm sun thaws the benumbed earth,
And makes it tender; gives a sacred birth
To the dead swallow; wakes in hollow tree
The drowsy cuckoo and the humble-bee.
Now do a choir of subtle minstrels bring,
In triumph to the world, the youthful spring:
The valleys, hills, and woods, in rich array,
Welcome the coming of the longed-for May.

DEACON ADAMS ADMONISHES HIS SON.

WHAT's them things in yer pocket, Jake, a-bulgin' out so? Hey?
What? Apples! After all my good advice, you mean to say
You've been a-stealin' apples ag'in on the Sabbath day!
A-stealin'! Hain't I told ye 'tis a sin to steal a pin?
And stealin' apples on Sunday is a blamed sight meaner sin;
But you will keep stealin' 'em, time and time ag'in.
Sweet apples, too, I'll ventur'! the sickliest kind of trash?
Such condemned foolish wickedness beats patience all to smash;
I wouldn't had it happen—not for fifty cents in cash!
To steal sweet apples, Sundays, ain't no ways to behave;
If you dodge the cholera morbus you'll live to be a knave,
And bring my wig and nat'ral hair in sorrer to the grave.
You'd make a purty deacon, wouldn't you? Why, look at me!
Did I get to be a deacon by petty larceny?
No! Stealin' is too risky for genuine piety.
We needn't allus tell the truth to spile a trade that's browin',
For if you don't take strangers in, in trade, why they'll take you in;—
But stealin' apples Sunday is the road to moral ruin.
I don't see, Jacob, where you got your streak of thievery;
It ain't the Adams' style—the Adamses was jest like me—
And on your mother's side, the Browns were famed for honesty.
I hope, I really hope, that you won't steal ag'in, my lad,
For if you should get ketched at it 'twould make me very sad.
Hem! Jacob—hain't you got a good sweet apple for your dad?"

ADVICE TO BOYS.

BY HENRY DOWNTON.

Whatever you are, be brave, boys!
The liar's a coward and slave, boys!
Though clever at ruses
And sharp at excuses,
He's a sneaking and pitiful knave, boys!

Whatever you are, be frank, boys!
'Tis better than money and rank, boys;
Still cleave to the right,
Be lovers of light,
Be open, above board, and frank, boys!

Whatever you are, be kind, boys!
Be gentle in manner and mind, boys;
The man gentle in mien,
Words, and temper, I ween,
Is the gentleman truly refined, boys!

But, whatever you are, be true, boys!
Be visible through and through, boys;
Leave to others the shamming,
The "greening" and "cramming."
In fun and in earnest, be true, boys!

The Minstrel.

I am no gifted child of song,
No harper old and gray,
To win the smiles of courtly throng,
With some enchanting lay;
Yet still to friendship old and true,
I'll touch the tuneful string,
And o'er thy heart as blissful dew,
Its music softly fling.

I would bring back the youthful page,
His true love, time and place,
The proud old father in his rage,
And put them face to face;
And humbly though the gift may be,
And weak my minstrel skill,
'Tis all I have to offer thee,
And am thy debtor still.

Lady, the silent hours of night,
When starlets twinkle free,
Are fraught with visions of delight,
And memories of thee;
And when the pale moon softly smiles,
Upon the other main,
And glides among the starry isles,
I list thy voice again.

I would recall some lovelit green,
Where island lovers smiled,
And bring again the festal scene.
At Moorish Ivanlid;
I'd bring them from earth's fairest spots,
From island, lake and sea,
Yet lady, all my waking thoughts
Are evermore of thee.

Ah! vain it were some glad refrain,
To other theme than this,
For I would have no note of pain,
In this sweet dream of bliss;
Dear lady, as I kneel to thee,
And pen this tuneful line,
Let love so changeless plead for me,
Oh! wilt thou not be mine?

Sung. Yrs

We parted! and the hand of fate,
With iron will and stern decree,
Still held our destinies apart,
While sailing o'er life's troubled sea.

We drifted on through weary years,
Through days of gloom and summer shine
And broken ties and falling tears
Have been thy lot as well as mine,

And bygone mem'ry slumbered deep,
Buried, methought, 'neath Lethe's stream;
The future but a dreary waste—
The past a brief but happy dream.

In fortune's smile, or darker frown,
Fond mem'ry struggled to be free,
But fetters held the captive down—
The mighty power of Destiny.

And now "thou'rt near and yet so far,"
Sweet friendship's tie may bind us yet;
The past is but a troubled dream
That each must struggle to forget.

The Promise.

I remember what you said
While the stars shone overhead—
Frosty stars, that gleamed above—
When I saw you last, my love!

Hand in hand, I said good-bye;
Heart to heart you made reply:
"Footsteps parting in the snow
Meet again when roses blow!"

Roses budded, bloomed, and fled—
All the summer flowers are dead;
Autumn showered her rainy tears—
Hopes have faded into fears.

Frosty stars are shining now,
Once again, above my brow;
Summer streams to ice are chilled,
And thy promise—unfulfilled!

If you put a hot coal in your pocket, it will burn its way out. And so a bad action you are trying to hide will make itself known. A fault concealed is a fault doubled; and so you will find out all the way through life. Never hide your faults.

"ONLY A TRAMP."

BY LUCIA E. F. KIMBALL.

So Bridget announced one cold, stormy morning last winter. The fire burned cheerily in my open grate. I was thoroughly comfortable, lounging over a new magazine the postman had just brought.

"Tell him we've nothing for him," I answered half mechanically, and a little impatient at being interrupted by so small a matter.

Tramps were such frequent callers I had grown quite indifferent to them, and took it for granted that they were all worthless vagabonds, too lazy to earn an honest living, and that helping them would only encourage idleness and beggary.

As my eyes went back to my book, they took in the dreariness of the winter storm, driving the sleet in wild gusts against the window. Something — the contrast, it may be, in the chill prospect without, and the warmth and comfort within — brought to me a painful sense of what a forlorn thing it was to be out begging on such a dismal morning.

I threw aside my magazine and went into the kitchen. Bridget had just shut the door upon the man. As I opened it a blinding whirl almost took away my breath.

"Come in and I'll give you something to eat," I said when I could speak.

The man was a genuine tramp — a trifle fiercer-looking than the guild are apt to be, with a sullen expression on his set, hard features. The snow and sleet hung in his shaggy hair, and the great rough hands were purple with cold.

I gave him a seat by the fire, set the coffee-pot on the stove, and with my own hands prepared him a warm breakfast. While he was eating I left him alone, and went up stairs to look for some clothing I had heard Fred say he shouldn't wear any more.

It did occur to me that he might steal some silver, but Bridget was busy with the chamber-work, and she never liked to be hindered. Someway I felt like trusting the man, though he was so ragged looking.

The heavy brows relaxed a little as I gave him the garments, and he thanked me for them and the breakfast.

"Ye'll be wantin' the snow shoveled, when the blow's over, an' I'll come round an' do it for yer, Mis', if ye'd like to hev me."

"We should," I answered, "if you can get round before any one else comes along."

He went out into the storm, and I went back to my magazine, but the article in which I had been so much interested had lost its relish, and along with the reading I fell into a kind of gloomy speculation as to the wherefore of life in general, and of tramps in particular.

I may as well tell you that for some years past I have been troubled with nervous depression, arising partly from my delicate health, and partly from my manner of living. You will think it strange that with my pleasant home and kind husband I have not always been a happy woman. I came from a large family, and we were always busy and lively. I missed the companionship and bustle that always comes along with a houseful, when I came to settle down with only my husband and myself, and a girl to do my work. There were plenty of things I might have been interested in, but I gradually fell into the way of not caring for anything outside of a certain narrow limit.

Fred was not a Christian, though he had the greatest respect for religion, and was very thoughtful of my wishes in regard to all matters pertaining to it. Of course this was a constant source of anxiety to me, but I see now how foolish I was in my manner of expressing it. Instead of trying to win him by showing the real brightness and beauty the Christian faith gives to every-day life, I wore a sad face whenever I spoke to him upon the subject, and he often came home and found me in tears, with no reason save that I was troubled and unhappy. I wonder now that he didn't come to hate religion, associating it as he must with my gloom and worry.

As time went on my seasons of depression grew more frequent, and my health really began to give way. Last fall Fred persuaded me to go home for a visit, hoping the change would benefit me. At first it was so delightful being in the dear old place once more, and having my friends all about me, that I improved greatly; but very soon I began to be troubled constantly about Fred and his staying at home alone, though he wrote the most cheerful letters. One day I suddenly made up my mind to come home. I came back to Fred hardly better than when I left. What I wanted was soul-healing, and that could not be found by change of scene.

I fancied that my life was useless, and that I had no influence over my husband. Sometimes the terrible thought would come that he might be better without me. Of course ill-health had something to do with such fancies, just as they, in a measure, were the cause of that; but I believe it was really spiritual ennui that was sapping the health of body and soul. My religion was not a motive power, and my life was purposeless and meagre in consequence.

You are wondering what all this has to do with "my tramp," as I have always called him. Much every way, as I shall show you, if you have the patience to wait.

I told my husband about him when he came home, and how seeing him had given me the "blues."

"Your 'blues' won't rid the country of tramps; if they would the government would pay you liberally for indulging in them," Fred said cheerily.

"He has promised to come round and clear the sidewalk when the storm is over."

Fred laughed. "He'll be a model tramp if he keeps his word. Whoever knew one of that sort of fellows to pay for favors received, in work, after he had once got out of sight. You'll see this trusty knight of the shovel tomorrow morning 'in a horn,' as the boys say. But don't fret about it, puss. These poor fellows have hard times enough in such weather as this anyway; but nine cases out of ten it's their own fault."

I had very little faith in the man's word, but since I had seemed to give him the credit of honesty, I hoped he would prove my judgment correct.

Very early the next morning I heard the scrape of a shovel on the sidewalk, and looking out, saw my veritable tramp hard at work. With a little flutter of triumph I called Fred to see.

"Are you sure he is the same one?" he asked with provoking incredulity.

"Sure? Of course I'm sure," I answered warmly.

"Oh well, he wants some more of your good coffee and doughnuts. Tramps, like the rest of us men, appreciate a first-class breakfast. But he has kept his word, and does his work well. I'll pay him double for it, and that will keep the 'blues' away — for how long, Tillie?" Fred said lightly as he tossed the money into my lap.

I gave the man another breakfast, praised his work, and paid him. The dark face brightened as he took the money.

"I hain't turned the like o' this for a long spell, Mis'. Thank ye fer't."

One day, nearly six weeks after this, Bridget came to say that a man wanted to see me. When I went to the door, I saw standing there a rough, clean-looking man, very plainly but neatly dressed.

"I 'spose ye don't know who I be," he said, in answer to my look of inquiry. "I'm the feller ye give a warm breakfast to nigh six weeks ago, one blowy mornin'. I shoveled yer sidewalk, an' ye paid me well fer't, too."

It slowly dawned upon me that "my tramp" had turned up again, but like Rip Van Winkle, so changed no one would recognize him.

I asked him in, puzzled as to the proper way of treating him under this new condition of things.

He relieved me by saying: "Do ye mind my tellin' ye how it all come round? I'd like ter, seein' it war yer kindness that put it inter my head ter be better, an' try to do somethin' fer myself. I ain't goin' ter keep back nothin'," he went on to say when I had assured him of my desire to hear his story, "so I may as well tell ye I had my mind made up ter lay my hands on ter anything that come handy, if I got inter yer house that mornin' ye give me the breakfast. I came pretty nigh stealin' yer spoons, while ye war gone up stairs, but somethin' sez ter me, 'She's gone off an' not left nobody ter watch ye, an' 'tis mighty mean ter take advantage o' that;' so I kep' my hands off o' things. I come back to shovel the snow mostly fer the breakfast, an' then I wanted ter let ye know I'd kep' my word."

"And you used the money I paid you to help start in a better way?" I asked brightly, interrupting him.

"No, Mis, I'm sorry to say I didn't. I meant ter, an' kep' thinkin' how I'd git a decent place ter sleep in an' look out fer jobs, an' try ter be sich a feller as folks could trust, it seemed so kinder nice. But I couldn't find no place whar thar warn't the smell o' whiskey, an' one night I come in a-cold an' shaky, an' the man as kep' the place, he give me a drink 'ter warm me up,' he sed, an' then I wanted more, an' I kep' drinkin' an drinkin' till my money war all gone, an' my brains too, an' I got noisy, I s'pose, an' the man turned me out o' doors inter the street, an' I lay thar all night. It's only the mercy o' God kep' me from freezin'. My feet an' hands war pretty nigh froze, an' when I come ter myself, I didn't know no place whar I could go — my money all gone, an' nobody in the world ter help me. As I was draggin' 'long the street, I see the sign the temp'rance wimin hev hung out afore the place whar they hold their meetin', an' I thinks, mebby I'll find another kind lady in thar; so I stumbled in. They give me a ticket fer a meal, an' a place ter sleep, an' asked me ter come agin to the meetin'."

"And they have taken care of you and dressed you up so nicely?" I interrupted again.

"No, Mis, but they done somethin' better'n that; they put me in a way ter take care o' myself. They got me to sign the pledge, an' tole me o' Him as could help me keep it. I niver knowed nothin' ter speak on 'bout the Bible an' Jesus Christ, an' at first I couldn't b'lieve 'bout its all bein' fer me; but I kep' going ter the meetings, an' the wimin talk so kind an' plain, an' made it seem so sure that the Lord He cares for sich good-for-nothin' fellers as me. An' now I'm holdin' on ter Him with all my might, an' I know I won't drink no more long's I do that. I know ye'd like the meetin', an' I come back ter tell ye 'bout them, an' what they've done fer me. P'raps ye'd go ter them some time. I heerd the ladies say they did 'em good, too."

The idea of this poor tramp coming to invite me to go to meeting amused me greatly. I laughed and told him I would think about it. After the man was gone I found myself wondering at the great change that had come to him, and the reality and help his religion was to him.

One day, not long after this, I did go to the meeting, more out of curiosity than anything else, I suppose. At first it seemed very strange, and quite contrary to my ideas of propriety, for women to be conducting a meeting in public. But before it was over I became so much interested that I quite forgot the singularity of the thing. I went again and again, and began to have a new sense of Christian faith and hope.

"My tramp" was always at the meeting when he could get away from his work — for he had steady employment then, and has ever since — and he usually brought some poor fellow with him that he had picked up in the street or met in his work. He used often to ask me to talk to those men. At first I couldn't think of a word to say, but after awhile I found it was a good way to read something out of the Bible to them, and that they always seemed glad to listen; and I, too, was helped and strengthened by what I read. The Bible became a new book to me, and my Christian faith something tangible that made all my life better and brighter.

My husband noticed the change, and encouraged my going. After a time he began to attend the evening meetings with me, and there the real witness of Christ's power to save touched his heart, and he, too, became a Christian. Now there is no place so dear to us both as these temperance prayer-meetings. They seem nearer heaven than any other place; it may be because we are not simply seeking good for ourselves, but for others, and those others the poor and wretched and friendless.

Do you wonder that I am an enthusiast in this work, and that my conservative friends think me beside myself? One of them met me on the street the other day, and asked me how I found time to go to so many meetings and do so much "benevolent work?" I told her I had a few less ruffles on my dresses, and that I didn't spend hours puzzling over a garment, trying to decide how it should be made. I think my house and my husband are as well cared for as ever, but I don't have time now for the "blues," or to spend crying over a new bonnet if it don't just suit me. I have given up some things, but they are all those that I am better without, and the infinite gain that has come to me in improved health and spirits, in my husband's conversion and his sympathy and help in every good work, would more than recompense any self-denial, however great. Then there is the sweetest satisfaction of all, that my life is of some use, and that I can help others who stand in sore need of it. When I think how my life has been brightened, and that I have my husband not only for time, but for a long, blessed eternity beside, and that it all came about through a poor forlorn tramp, I can't help having a kindly feeling toward the whole class, though they are the "great unwashed," whom the world despise and dread.

When I was first asked to lead the temperance meeting I thought I never could; but it seemed so ungrateful, after I had received so much, not to be willing to try, even though I utterly failed, that I consented. I don't think I was very edifying, but it did me good, and every time that I attempt it now, I feel stronger and better for the effort. That is a real self-sacrifice for me, but I begin to understand the "hundredfold" that comes along with it.

From his sumptuous easy-chair
A dyspeptic millionaire
To his wife so fond and fair:
"Alice, I would rather be Any barefoot boy we see
With digestion strong and free
Than, with all my stocks and gold,
Bear these miseries untold."

"Courage, dear!" his Alice said,
"A sovereign aid, so I have read,
For all these evils you deplore,
Is now for sale at many a store."
The bell was rung, the servant sent,
The BITTERS brought, the wrapper rent:
Nor stocks, nor gold could buy, to-day,
From that glad man his remedy.

DR. ENOCH ADAMS

BOY WANTED.

I went once to an intelligent man of business to apply for a situation on behalf of a friend of mine out of employment. I was able to give a good account of my friend's qualifications, and I did so.

"Send him along," said the business man, "and let me see him. If he is what you describe, we want him a great deal more than he wants us."

It does not matter for my purpose, but as I am writing for boys always like to know how things come out, I may as well tell them that my friend got the situation, and made a valuable assistant.

The fact is, boys, what this business man said is true almost always and almost everywhere. Situations are hunting for men far more keenly and far more constantly than men for situations. And the same thing is true in respect to boys. There is always a boy wanted. "Is there?" you brighten up and say. "If that's so, then I'm the chap they are looking for."

Hold! not so fast, my lad! Let us see. Are you honest? Yes. How do you know you are? You never steal? Very good, so far. That means, I suppose, you never did steal. But there is many and many a boy—and man too, for that matter—that never stole, who yet is not honest. They have not had the chance, or the temptation; that is is all. Put them to the test. Alas for their virtue! The question is not simply, "Did you ever steal?" but "Would you ever?" You are sure, perhaps; but it takes time for us to be sure about you. We shall have to try you. We want, first of all, an honest boy. He must be a boy that would not steal. Boy wanted.

Again, are you truthful? Do you never tell a falsehood? Did you never? Would you never? How near can you come to telling a lie, and not quite tell one? Have you done anything smart in this line?—ever deceived your mother, your brother, your playmate, and bragged of it? Well, then, perhaps indeed you never told a lie outright, but you are not truthful, nevertheless. Did you ever hear of the gentleman that advertised for a coachman? He asked each comer, "How near can you drive to the edge of a precipice and not go over?"

One man could drive within two feet, another within one foot, another within six inches, still another would undertake to shave along within an inch. None of these would suit. Finally a man came that said, "I would keep as far away as I could." "You're my coachman!" exclaimed the gentleman; and he hired him.

The boy that keeps as far from a lie as he can is the boy for us. Boy wanted.

Are you faithful! Now, a modest boy may claim to be honest and claim to be truthful without damage to his modesty. But to the question, "Are you faithful?" a modest boy can only say, "Try me." If you are not faithful you fail in truthfulness. You have not kept your promise; and you are not honest, you have not done right by the person whom you undertook to serve. You did not, indeed, steal the money from his letter, but by not putting his letter in the office when you should, you have, perhaps, done him more damage than the loss of so much money twice over.

Are you capable? Modesty forbids you to say "Yes," and truthfulness forbids you to say "No." Well, keep silent; then we shall not think the less of you for holding your tongue.

And, by the way, can you hold your tongue? This is an important talent in a boy—in a man as well, but it is a little rarer in a boy. Do not talk too much. Do not brag. Do not tell long stories. A quiet boy—one that goes about his work and says nothing—is a treasure. Do not ask many questions. Watch with eye and ear and keep up a "terrible thinking," but keep a close mouth. Learn silently. Make few excuses. Do the thing. Be sure there is a boy wanted. Do you be the boy?

THE SUICIDE SAVED.

In old Massachusetts there never was seen
A wretcheder man than good Archibald Green;
For lost was his fortune, and lost his dear wife,
All nature was clouded, and dark was his life.
His friends strove to cheer him, in vain did they try,
He resolved self-destruction, determined to die!
His purpose, so cunning, he hid in his breast
While he sought for the means to secure his long rest:
He honed up his razor, and whetted his knife,
And untangled a rope to end the sad strife:
But courage, alone, he found wanting to bind
The wish of his heart and intent of his mind:
He must surely have something to wedge up his pluck
Before the death blow could be properly struck.
Now Archie was pious, he never would drink,
Much less now he stood on eternity's brink,—
He asked of his druggist, "The best that is had,
For a temperate man who is weakly and sad."
Rush's Bitters he got, best of tonics, sure cure
For thousands of ills which poor mortals endure.—
They toned up poor Archie so strong and so bright,
His sad, wicked purpose fore'er took its flight.—
Now, married again to a sweet little wife,
He has won back his fortune, rejoices in life:—
"To Rush's good Bitters," he's oft heard to say,
"I owe all I have, all I am at this day."

WHAT MYRTIE SAW.

BY ANNIE ARMSTRONG.

"I want to tell you, dolly, the fings I
  last night;
You know I went off early, and left y dressed in white;
You knew 'twas Christmas evenin', I tol
  you so before,
And so I hung my stockin' behind the bedroom door,
And mamma said I'd better go right straight off to sleep
When I got up from prayin' "the Lord my soul to keep;"
But I was just determined to stay awake because
My bruvver said there wasn't ever any Santa Claus.

"I kept my eyes wide open, and waited awful long,
And they kept gettin' heavy, but I was pretty strong;
And I just didn't shut 'em, and by and by
  I heard
A funny sound a comin'; I didn't say a word,
But kept as still as ever, and listened just as hard,
And then a lot of horses came runnin'
  through the yard.
And up the house they galloped, and in a minute more
Some one came down the chimney and jumped upon my floor.

"First I was kind o' frightened, and when I dared to look,
I knew him by the picture in my big story book.
He had such lots o' presents, and such a funny smile,
I thought I'd like to watch him go round an awful while.
I didn't see the presents, for he went the other side,
But I saw 'em in the mornin', and I laughed until I cried.
But he was in a hurry, and made an awful leap
Right back up through the chimney — and then I went to sleep.

"And when I told my bruvver, this morn-
  in' in the hall,
He laughed at me like sixty, and said I
  dreamt it all.
Guess I know when I'm dreamin'; he needn't be so smart —
I wish I'd told old Santy not to give him that red cart.
He's eight years old this New Year's, and finks he's awful nice,
But I know Santy Claus, so there — I saw him wif my eyes!
And, oh, he looked so funny! wish I could show you how,
Or, dolly, I was just as wide awake as I am now!"

THE WISE MEN FROM THE EAS

O'er the hill and o'er the vale
  Come three kings together,
Caring naught for snow and hail,
  Cold, and wind, and weather;
Now on Persia's sandy plains,
Now where Tigris swells with rains,
  They their camels tether.
Now through Syrian lands they go,
Now through Moab, faint and slow,
Now o'er Edom's heather.

O'er the hill and o'er the vale,
  Each king bears a present;
Wise men go a Child to hail,
  Monarchs seek a peasant;
And a star in front proceeds,
Over rocks and rivers leads,
  Shines and beams incessant;
Therefore onward, onward still,
Ford the stream and climb the hill,—
  Love makes all things pleasant.

He is God ye go to meet.
  Therefore incense proffer;
He is King ye go to greet,
  Gold is in your coffer.
Also man; He comes to share
Every woe that man can bear,—
  Tempter, railer, scoffer,—
Therefore now, against the day,
In the grave where Him they lay,
  Myrrh ye also offer.

Memory of a Sunset by the Lake.

BY J. E. WHITNEY.

The splendor streams across the lake,
  The day is in its matchless close,
  The golden light to crimson grows,
In fiery spray the billows break.

Now, mellow dusk blends with the fire,
  The twilight grows from more to more,
  The splendor leaves the dreamy shore
And burns upon the distant spire.

We sit, O friend, and watch the scene
  Till twilight deepens into night;
  Until the moon, serene and bright,
Sends o'er the waves her silvery sheen.

To-night within my room, once more
  I see the surging sheet of fire,
  The glory on the village spire,
The ruddy light along the shore.

A Doctor's Story.

I am a doctor. I live in London, and in one of the most crowded localities.

I had been in my present abode two years, and had never had a patient from the more aristocratic circles, when one night, about 11:30, I was startled by a violent ring at my bell, and having just got to bed after a hard day's work, I can't say the summons was agreeable.

However, I ran to my window at once, and, thrusting my head out into the rain, cried, "Who is there?"

A voice answered, "Only I, doctor. It's an urgent case. Please come down to the door?"

I hurried on some clothes, sped down stairs, and opened the door. There stood, in the full light of the hall lamp, an elderly lady, dressed in mourning.

She put out the smallest of hands, in a fine, black kid glove, and said, piteously, "Are you the doctor?"

"Yes," I said.

"Then come with me," said she. "Don't delay. It's life or death. Come!"

I hurried on my overcoat, caught up my umbrella, and, offering my arm to the old lady, walked down the wet street with her.

"You must be my guide, madam," I said. "I do not know where you live."

She instantly gave me a street and number that surprised me still more. It was a tolerably aristocratic quarter of the town.

"Who is ill, madam," I inquired, "a grown person, or a child?"

"A young lady—my daughter," she said.

"Suddenly?"

"Yes, suddenly," she answered. "Do you keep a brougham? You should have had it out if you do. We would have been able to go faster."

"I keep no conveyance," I said.

"Perhaps you are poor!" she said, eagerly.

"Certainly not rich," I said.

"Cure her, and I'll make you rich," she said, in a sort of suppressed shriek. "Cure her, and I'll give you anything you ask. I don't care for money. I am rolling in gold. Cure her, and I'll shower it on you."

"You are excited, madam," I said. "Pray be calm."

"Calm!" she said. "Calm! but you don't know a mother's heart."

We had reached the street she had indicated, and were at the door of one of its houses. The old lady ascended the steps, and opened the door with a latch key. A light burned in the hall; another in one of the parlors, the furniture of which was draped and shrouded in white linen.

"Wait here, sir, if you please," she said, as she led me into one of these.

I waited what I thought a most unreasonable time in that gloomy parlor. I began to grow a little nervous, when a stout, short, red-faced woman, bustled into the room.

"I beg your pardon, sir," she said, in a singular tone, such as one who had committed a speech to memory might use; "but my missus—the lady who brought you here—is very nervous, and needlessly alarmed. She begs your acceptance of the customary fee, and there is no need of your services."

Thus speaking, she handed me a guinea, courtesied, and opened the door for me. I bowed, expressed my pleasure that the patient was better, and departed.

It was a queer sort of adventure, rather amusing than otherwise; besides, I had a good fee.

I rose early next morning, and paid a couple of visits before breakfast. Returning, to my astonishment, I found sitting in my consulting-room the lady of the night before. She rose as I entered.

"What must you think of me?" she said. "But no matter. My daughter is very dear to me, and I have heard of your skill. She is worse again. Can you call some time to-day, as early as possible, at my house?"

"I will be there in an hour."

The lady took out her purse.

"I am an old-fashioned woman," she said. "I retain old-fashioned habits. In my day the doctor received his fee on the spot. It was, in ordinary cases, a guinea. Will you receive it now?"

I did not know what to say, but she laid the money on the table, and departed.

I ate my breakfast, and, having dressed myself carefully, made my way to the old lady's house. I knocked. The door was opened by the stout female who had dismissed me the night before.

"The doctor," I said, by way of explanation.

"Ah!" said she. "Has missus called you in again?"

"Yes," I answered.

"There is no need, I assure you, sir," she said. "I can't really ask you in. There's no one ill here. It's a whim of missus'. I'm a better judge of illness than she. No need of a doctor!"

I left the house, of course, partly in dudgeon, partly in amazement.

Three weeks passed by, when, lo! the old lady again.

She walked into my consulting-room, dressed as before, as greatly agitated, as carefully polite.

"Sir," she said, "again I trouble you. My poor daughter! Come at once."

"Madam," I answered, "it is a doctor's duty, as it should be his pleasure, to obey such calls; but you are aware that I have been sent from your door twice without seeing the patient. Allow me to ask you a question—are you the mistress of that house?"

"Heaven knows I am," said the old lady. "I have lived there for forty years. I am the only person under that roof who has the right to give an order."

"And the person who sent me away?"

"My old servant, Margaret."

"Did she do it at your order?"

"No, sir; it was a piece of presumption. But Margaret means well. She loves us."

"Then, madam, if I accompany you, I shall see the patient?"

"Assuredly, sir."

I put on my hat again, and we went out of the house together. We exchanged very few words as we walked the streets. At the door of her house the old lady paused.

"Don't mind Margaret," she whispered. "She means well."

Then she ascended the steps.

At the last one the door was opened to us by the woman I had twice seen before.

"The doctor must see my child, Margaret," said the old lady.

Margaret stepped back.

"Walk in, sir," was all she said.

The old lady beckoned me to follow her. I did so. She went up stairs, and opened the first door we came to. It was an empty bed-room. She closed it with a sigh. The next room into which she led me was also empty. So were all the others. In effect, we visited six apartments, only one of which seemed to be regularly occupied as a sleeping chamber; and at the last the lady turned to me with a strange glitter in her eyes.

"Stolen," she said, "stolen; somebody has stolen my girl. Sir, do you know, I think it must be Satan!"

Then a steady step crossed the sill. Margaret came in, and the old lady, bursting into tears, suffered her to lead her away.

As I made my way down stairs, Margaret rejoined me.

"You understand it now," she said. "You see this poor lady is not in her right mind."

"I do, indeed," I said.

"She had a daughter, once," said Margaret, "and the girl—a pretty creature of sixteen—ran away with a bad man. She came back home one day, and begged forgiveness. Her mother turned her from the door, in a fury. It was night; the rain and hail beat down on the poor thing, and the wind buffeted her. There is no knowing what happened to her that night; but, next morning, she lay dead in the police station. Her mother's address was pinned to her baby's clothing, and they brought her home. From that awful day, sir, my mistress—who, in her remorse and delirium, called in twenty doctors to bring her dead daughter to life—has always been doing what she has done to you. I try to keep the secret generally, but some find it out, and others think hard things of us. I thought I would let you know the truth. If she contrives to come again to you, you can always promise to call, and so be rid of her. Poor soul! She has nobody in the world but me now. She's punished for her hardness, at any rate, and you'll excuse her conduct."

I bowed. I could say nothing. Margaret opened the door for me, and I walked out into the fresh air.

As I looked back upon the house, with all its elegance, it seemed to me to have a haunted air, as though the ghost of the poor girl still hovered about it.

"God only knows how many fearful secrets such handsome homes may at times shut in," I said to myself, as I turned my back upon it gladly.

I have never seen the poor old lady since that hour. Probably Margaret has kept too close watch upon her.

An English sexton and parish clerk, was once lettering a grave-stone in the church-yard, when the village physician happened by.

"Why, Peter," said the doctor, pointing to the half-cut inscription, "you've spelt it wrong."

"Have I, doctor?" answered Peter, sharply. "Well, well, pass it over, doctor—pass it over. I've covered up monny a blot o' yours."

DR. ENOCH ADAMS

WANTED. BOY WANTED.

tory of a Physician's Wife.

"I have heard of persons whose hair was whitened through excessive fear, but as I never saw myself any one so affected, I am disposed to be incredulous on the subject."

The above remark was made to Dr. Maynard as he sat on the piazza of his pretty villa, discussing the different effects of terror on dissimilar temperaments. Without replying to me, the doctor turned to his wife and said: "Helen, will you please relate to my old friend the incident within your experience. It is the most convincing argument I can advance."

I looked at Mrs. Maynard in surprise. I had observed that her hair, which was luxuriant and dress very becomingly, was purely colorless, but, as she was a young woman, and also a very pretty one, I surmised that it was powdered to heighten the brilliancy of her fine dark eyes.

The doctor and I had been fellow students, but, after leaving college, we had drifted apart—I to commence practice in an eastern city, he to pursue his profession in a growing town in the west. I was now on a visit to him for the first time since his marriage.

Mrs. Maynard, no doubt reading my supposition by my look of incredulity, smiled as she shook her snowy tresses over her shoulders, and, seating herself by her husband's side, related the following episode:

"It was nearly two years ago since my husband was called on one evening to visit a patient several miles away. Our domestics had all gone to a 'wake' in the vicinity, the dead man being a relative of one of our serving-women. Thus I was left alone. But I felt no fear, for we never had heard of burglars or any sort of desperadoes in our quiet village, then consisting of a few scattering houses. The windows leading out upon the piazza were open as now, but I secured the blinds before my husband's departure, and locked the outside doors all except the front one, which I left for the doctor to lock after going out, so that, if I should fall asleep before his return he could enter without arousing me. I heard the doctor's rapid footsteps on the gravel, quickened by the urgent tones of the messenger who awaited him; and, after the sharp rattle of carriage wheels had become but an echo, I seated myself by the parlor astral, and soon became absorbed in the book I had been reading before being disturbed by the summons, but after a time my interest succumbed to drowsiness, and I thought of retiring, when the clock in the doctor's study struck 12, so I determined to wait a few moments more, feeling that he would now be home very soon. I closed my book, donned a robe-de-chambre, let down my hair, and then returned to my seat to patiently wait and listen. Not the faintest sound disturbed the stillness of the night. Not a breath of air stirred the leaf. The silence was so profound that it became oppressive. I longed for the sharp click of the gate latch and the well known step on the gravel-walk. I did not dare to break the hush myself by moving or singing, I was so oppressed by the deep stillness. The human mind is a strange torture of itself. I began to conjure up dim fancies about ghostly visitants in the midst of which occurred to me the stories I had heard from superstitious people about the troubled spirits of those who had died suddenly, like the man whom my servant had gone to 'wake,' who had been killed by an accident at the saw-mill. In the midst of these terrifying reflections I was started by a stealthy footfall on the piazza. I listened between fear and hope. It might be the doctor. But no, he would not tread like that; the step was too soft and cautious for anything less wily than a cat. I listened again, my eyes were fixed on the window-blind. I saw the slats move slow and softly, and then the rays of the moon disclosed a thin cadaverous face, and bright, glittering eyes peering at me. O, horror! Who was it? or what was it? I felt the cold perspiration start at every pore. I seemed to be frozen in my chair. I could not move—I could not cry out, my tongue seemed glued to the roof of my mouth, while the deathly-white face pressed closer, and the great sunken eyes wandered in their gaze around the room. In a few moments the blind closed as noiselessly as it had been opened, and the cautious footsteps came toward the door. 'Merciful heaven!' I cried in a horror-stricken whisper, as I heard the key turn in the lock, 'the doctor, in his haste, must have forgotten to withdraw the key!'"

"God forgive me!" ejaculated Dr. Maynard, interrupting his wife, and looking far more excited than she. "I can never forgive myself for such a thoughtless act. Please proceed, my dear."

"I heard the front door open, the step in the hall, and helpless as a statue I sat riveted to my chair. The parlor door was open, in it stood a tall, thin man, whom I never beheld before. He was dressed in a long, loose robe—a sort of gaberdine, and a black velvet skull-cap partially concealed a broad forehead, under which gleamed black eyes, bright as living coals, and placed so near together that their gaze was preternatural in its directness. heavy grizzled eyebrows hung over them like the tangled mane of a lion, the nose was sharp and prominent, and the chin was overgrown with white hair, which hung down in locks as weird as the ancient mariner's. He politely doffed his cap, bowed, replaced it, and then said in a slightly foreign accent: 'Madam, it is not necessary for me to stand on any further ceremony, as your husband, Dr. Maynard (hereupon he again bowed profoundly) has already made you acquainted with my business here to night. I perceive,' he added, glancing at my neglige robe, 'that you were expecting me.'"

"'No,' I found voice to stammer. 'The doctor has said nothing to me about a visitor at this hour of the night.'

"'Ah! he wished to spare you, no doubt a disagreeable apprehension,' he returned, advancing, and taking a seat on the sofa opposite me, where for a few moments he sat and eyed me from head to foot with a strange glitter in his eyes that mysteriously impressed me. 'You have a remarkable fine physique, madam,' he observed quietly, one that might deceive the eye of the most practiced physician. Do you suffer much pain?'"

"Unable to speak, I shook my head. A terrible suspicion was creeping over me. I was alone, miles away from aid or rescue, with a madman.

"'Ah!' he continued reflectively, 'your husband may have mistaken a tumor for a cancer. Allow me to feel your pulse,' he said, rising and bending over me.

"I thought it best to humor him, remembering it was unwise for a helpless woman to oppose the as yet harmless freak of a lunatic. He took out his watch, shook his head gravely, laid my hand down gently, and then went toward the study where, on the table, was an open case of surgical instruments.

"'Do not be alarmed, madame,' he said to me as I was about to rise and flee, and in another instant he was by my side, with the case in his possession.

"Involuntarily I raised my hand and cried:

'Spare me! Oh, spare me, I beseech you!'"

"'Madame, he said sternly, clashing my wrist with his long, sinewy fingers, with a grip of steel, 'you behave like a child. I have no time to parley, for I received a letter from the emperor of the French stating that he is suffering from an iliac abscess, and is desirous of my attendance. I must start for Europe immediately after performing the operation upon your breast,' and before I could make the slightest resistance, he had me in his arms and was carrying me into the study, where there was a long table covered with green baize. On this he laid me, and holding me down with one hand with the strength of a maniac, he brought forth from some hidden recess in his gown several long leather straps, with which he secured me to the table with the skill of an expert. It was but the work of a moment to unloose my robe and bare my bosom. Then, after carefully examining my left breast, he said:

'Madame, your husband has made a mistake. I find no necessity for my intended operation.'

"At this I gave a long drawn sigh of relief, and prepared to rise."

"'But,' he continued, 'I have made the discovery that your heart is as large as that of an ox! I will remove it so that you may see for yourself, reduce it to its natural size by a curious process of my own, unknown to the medical science, and of which I am the sole discoverer, and then replace it again.'"

"He then began to examine the edge of the cruel knife, on which I closed my eyes, while every nerve was in perceptable tremor."

"'The mechanism of the heart is like a watch,' he resumed: 'If it goes too fast the great blood-vessel that supplies the force must be stopped like the lever of a watch, and the works must be cleansed and repaired and regulated. It may interest you to know that I was present at the post-mortem examination held over the remains of the beautiful Louise of Prussia. Had I been consulted before her death I would have saved her by taking out her heart and removing the polypi, between which it was wedged like as if in a vice, but I was called too late. The king and I had a little difference, he was German, I am French. I trust that is sufficient explanation.'"

"He now bent over me, his long white beard brushing my face I raised my eyes beseechingly, trying to think of some way to save myself. 'Oh, sir, give me an anæsthetic, that I may not feel the pain!' I pleaded.

"'Indeed, indeed, madame I would comply with your wish were you not the wife of a physician—of a skillful surgeon. I wish you to note with what ease I perform this difficult operation, so that you may tell your husband of the great servant whose services he secured fortunately in season.'"

"As he said this, he made the final test of the knife on his thumb. How precious were the moments now! They were fleeing all too fast and yet an eternity seemed compressed in every one. I never fainted in my life. and I never felt less like swooning than now, as I summoned all of my presence of mind to delay the fearful moment, fervently praying in the meantime for my husband's return.

"'Doctor, said I, with assumed composure, 'I have the utmost confidence in your skill; I would not risk my life to another, but, doctor you have forgotten to bring a napkin to staunch the blood. If you will have the goodness to ascend to my sleeping chamber at the right of the hall, you will find everything you need for that purpose in that bureau.'"

"'Ah, madame,' he said shaking his head sagaciously, 'I never draw blood during a surgical operation, that is another one of my secrets unknown to the faculty.'

"Then placing his hand on my bosom, he added with horrible pleasantry:

"'I'll scarcely mar that whiter skin than snow, and smooth as monumental alabaster.'

"'O, God!' I cried, as I felt the cold steel touch my breast, but with the same breath came deliverance.

"Quick as thought a heavy woolen piano-cover was thrown over the head and person of the madman, and bound tightly around him. As quickly as I was released and the throngs that bound me soon held the maniac.

"My husband held me in his arms. He had noiselessly approached, and taking the horror of my situation at a glance, had, by the only means at hand, secured the madman, who was the very patient he had been summoned to attend, but who had escaped the yigilance of his keeper soon after the departure of the messenger, who had now returned with the doctor in pursuit of him. As the poor wretch was being hurried away he turned to me and said: 'Madame, this is a plot to rob me of my reputation. Your husband is envious of my great skill as a surgeon. Adieu!' I afterward learned that the man was once an eminent surgeon in Europe, but which learning had made him mad. When he bound me to that table my hair was as black as a raven, when I left it, it was as you see it now—white as full grown cotton."

Love's Calendar.

Talk of love in vernal hours
When the landscape blushes,
With the dawning glow of flowers,
While the early thrushes
Warble in the apple tree;
When the primrose springing
From the green bank, lulls the bee,
On its blossom swinging.

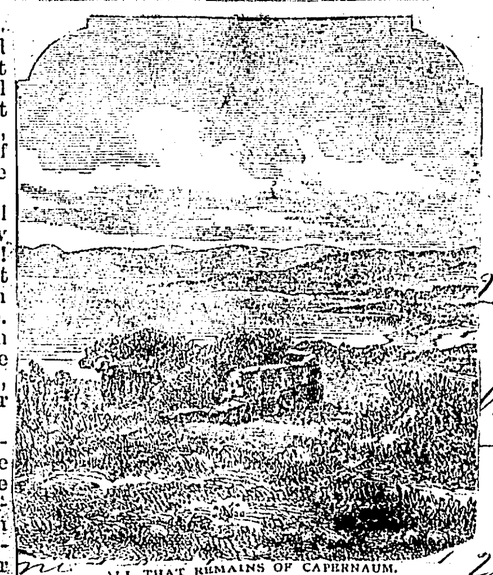

Talk of love in summer-tide
When through bosky shallows
Trills the streamlet—all its side
Pranked with freckled mallows:
When in mossy lair of wrens
Tiny eggs are warming;
When above the reedy fens
Dragon-gnats are swarming.

Talk of love in autumn days,
When the fruit, all mellow,
Drops amid the ripening rays,
While the leaflets yellow
Circle in the sluggish breeze
With their portents' bitter;
When between the fading trees
Broader sunbeams glitter.

Talk of love in winter time,
When the hailstorm hurtles,
While the robin sparks of rime
Shakes from hardy myrtles;
Never speak of love with scorn,
Such were direst treason;
Love was made for eve and morn,
And for every season.

CHARLES KENT.

A WELL-KNOWN Oxford man, who was at the same time fellow of his college and head master of a prosperous grammar school, was once detected by an old pupil skating on a Sunday afternoon. "I think, doctor," was not the unnatural observation, "you once flogged me for boating a Sunday." "Yes, my dear boy," was the reply, "and I did quite right. If a man really likes boating, one day to him is the same as another. Skating is entirely different. It may freeze hard on the Saturday night and then thaw again before daybreak on Monday morning."

WAITING.

Heavy with blooms the garden lay,
And gave its fragrance to the street
In odorous breath, that, rich and sweet,
Come floating through the dusty way.

And drew me to the garden's shade
Where trembling, stood an aged pair,
Whose dimming eyes still watched with care
The flower groups their weak hands had made.

A flower they gave me, dewy—wet,
I cooled my lips among its leaves,
O, never reaper with his sheaves
Did bind a fairer flower than that!

I lingered near the garden gate
Conversing with the aged pair,
A hallowed influence seemed there,
A hush, as when faint travelers wait.

For something that must soon appear,
For the swift Herald's kind relief,
Strength for their weakness—joy for grief;
Ah, even now—he may be near!

Fit resting place, among the bloom
Of huddled flowers, for weary feet,
Grown way-worn in life's dust and heat,
This garden is their waiting room.

Kind Herald, gently close the door
When close it must on all below,
Till the full light of Heaven shall flow
Like fragrance from the other shore.

Overtaken by the Tide.

Ah, Nelly, you little thought the tide was creeping around and covering the low rocks behind you! The shells and pebbles were so pretty, you was absorbed in your search for them, until the splashing water came so near, you turned to retreat, when, lo! you were surrounded. We are glad that you see help coming at last to save you from a watery grave. But, oh! there are so many in this world, who are overtaken by the tide, that the thought makes us sad.

The young man is fascinated with his wine and cards and feels safe in his position; but, when all at once the truth flashes upon him that he had better retreat, lo! the waves of appetite surround him, and there is little hope of help except from above.

Be careful, young friends, lest, while you are engaged in sinful pleasures, you are overtaken by the tide.

DR. ENOCH ADAMS

The Twelve O'Clock Man.

Every day, for many years, just before noon, a man used to come into the space before the Brooklyn City Hall, and stand looking up at the clock, with the air of one who had made an appointment to meet some one there at that hour, but no one ever came.

When the hands of the clock had passed their moment of meeting and the minute hand hurried on, leaving the other behind, the watcher would give a sigh and pass on. Then, having reached the gate, he would suddenly fix his eyes upon some female figure and start in pursuit—seem to discover a mistake and look at the clock again. Then he would seat himself upon the steps again and cover his face with his hands, and rising suddenly ask some one near if the clock was fast. His motions were as much the same each day as are those of an actor, who repeats the same part, and even strangers were struck by their peculiarity. To the habitués of the place, he was known as the "twelve o'clock man," and to some his coming was a source of amusement; others shook their heads and whispered that the poor man had lost his mind; but whatever they thought, however much they stared, at noon the man was always there, staring at the clock. The worst storm never kept him away, and Sabbath or holiday made no difference. He never met the one he came to meet, but he was always in time to see the hands cross themselves at the mark of noon.

When that clock of the City Hall, which has looked down upon the streets of Brooklyn so many years, was new, there lived in that city a man young, ardent, and full of hope, who, as most young men do, sooner or later, had fallen in love with a pretty woman and asked her to be his wife. The girl had consented and they were engaged. He desired to be married at once, but she refused to set the day. She had put him off for one reason or another for two years; and, meanwhile, he had half-a-dozen quarrels with her, for she had been a great coquette, and even now one of her old lovers dangled about her.

Sometimes the man declared there must be an end to such work, but the girl could twist him about her finger as she chose, and it always ended in a reconciliation, until, one day, he met the two walking together arm in arm in a lover-like way, and at last declared that he would bear no more. She must choose between them and choose speedily.

The girl was frightened; from that moment she at least pretended to comport herself properly. She told her betrothed lover that she had no real tenderness for any one but himself, and that she had forbidden the other man to see her again. And he was happy, and all other meetings were pleasant. They were neither rich nor fashionable people, and his work occupied him all day, but in the evening they were together, and sometimes at the hour of noon, their mutual dinner-hour, they stole a few moments for meeting. She left the store where she was employed, he left his work-shop, and they took a little walk together; and she was all he could have wished, kind, gentle, modest, apparently with no eyes save for him. And she had set the wedding-day; and he thought only of the hour that should make her his.

It was close at hand, when one evening she told him with a smile that she would meet him in the City Hall Park next day.

"I have a holiday," she said, "and I shall be there at noon. Why do you not take one, too? We might go to some pleasant place and spend the afternoon," and he had agreed at once. "If I am not there at noon wait for me," she said.

And at noon the man was there watching the clock. The hands met and passed each other, and he looked eagerly toward the gates, but she did not come. She was late, but he was patient; he walked slowly about, he sat upon the steps, he lounged on the benches. One o'clock came. A policeman passed and he asked him if he thought the clock kept good time; but still he was not uneasy.

"Wait for me," she had said; and he waited. All through the long afternoon he kept his post; but as the evening shadows grew long, he felt sadly troubled. To leave might be to miss her, yet he longed to go in search of her. She might be ill, some accident might have happened.

At last, as it grew dark, he resolved to watch the employés leave the store where she was engaged, for it might be that the holiday had not been given after all. He sought the spot. She was not one of the little crowd of girls who left the store, but he knew one of them, and saluting her, asked if "Eliza" had not been there that day.

The girl looked at him in surprise.

"Oh, no, Mr. ——," she said, "Eliza left yesterday; didn't you know that?" Then she added: "We thought she was going to be married."

And now this ardent lover began to fancy that pecuniary trouble had befallen his darling.

"She has lost her place," he said. "Well, she must marry me at once. She shall not seek another." And he set forward toward her home—a plain little boarding-house in a shabby street, thinking of her very tenderly and building bright air castles. They would be so happy together; he should build such a pretty little nest for his bird. He was not rich, but she should have all she wanted.

As he stood on the door-steps, waiting for some one to admit him, he felt that he had never loved her so well before.

A stupid girl answered the bell.

"Miss ——," she repeated; "oh, no, Miss —— has gone away." Then she remembered that she had been charged with a letter. "I guess it's for you," she said, taking it from her soiled apron pocket, "'cause the other man has gone with her, you know."

"What other man?" cried the poor fellow; but the girl had shut the door, and he staggered away, and with trembling hands tore open the envelope, and read the letter within it by the light of a shop-window. It was very brief. This was all it said:

"I suppose you waited for me in the Park. I tell you candidly that I never meant to meet you there. That I never intended to marry you. I have married ——. I should have been more open with you if I had known that he was in earnest; but he was rich and I thought he might be flirting with me. We were married to-day. I did not want a scene, so I told you to wait for me, and when you read this I shall be on an ocean vessel far at sea. I hope you'll not take it hard; I'm not worth it; but I never could have been happy with a jealous man like you, nor a jealous man with me. Good-by."

The poor fellow read it all twice through before he fell down in a heap upon the pavement. Strangers picked him up and carried him to a hospital. There he lay for weeks, and when at last they discharged him cured, no one would have known him. That was the first day that people noticed him staring at the clock in the Park at high noon. Since then, every day has found him there. Rain or shine, summer or winter, he has kept his tryst, until one day, a week or two ago, the boys who watched and grinned at the "twelve o'clock man" saw him lie down upon a bench with his arm under his head and close his eyes. Some one drew near and looking at him compassionately said:

"Are you ill? Can I help you?"

Then he opened his eyes.

"No, I am only tired," said he. "I think she is not coming, unless—unless the clock is wrong."

Then the strange, far-away look of the dying man was fixed upon the clock, and the eyes closed no more, until kind hands drew down the lids. The "twelve o'clock man" was dead.

THE ANGELS' SONG.

BY REV. J. H. BEALE.

We hear the glad song through echoing skies,
Which angels prolong in their gladsome surprise:—
"A Saviour is born, and the darkness is past;
The brightness of morn has arisen at last."

That song first was caught on Judah's lone plain;
With love richly fraught still re-echoes again;
Now, "Glory to God in the highest!" they sing;
"O praise ye the Lord, for glad tidings we bring!

"May peace reign on earth, with good-will to man;
Though humble its birth, salvation's great plan
We see like the morning arising so bright—
The hill-tops adorning with glorious light."

Then sing the loud chorus of heavenly song,
Which swelling far o'er us still stretches along!
The mists of the ages are quickly withdrawn,
And history's pages have caught the fair dawn,—

The morning when earth redeemed shall sing
The song of His birth, with echoes shall ring
The universe 'round in the anthem of praise,—
"A Saviour is found in the 'Ancient of Days.'"

Winning a Widow.

The widow Cummiskey was standing at the door of her little millinery store in Newark Avenue the other evening, as Mr. Costello came along. Mr. Costello stopped.

"Good evenin' to you, ma'am," said he.

"Good evenin' to you, Mr. Costello," answered the widow.

"It's fine weather we're havin', ma'am," continued Mr. Costello.

"It is that, thank God," replied Mrs. Cummiskey, "but the winter's comin' at last, and it comes to all both great and small."

"Ah!" said Mr. Costello, "but for all that it doesn't come to us all alike. Now, here are you, ma'am, fat, rosy, an' good lookin', equally swate as a summer greenin', a fall pippin or a winter russet"——

"Arrah, hould yer whist, now," interrupted the fair widow, laughing. "Much an old bachelor like you knows about apples or women. But come in, Mr. Costello, an' take a cup o' tay with me for I was only standin' be the doore, lookin' at the poople passin', for company sake, like, and I'm sure the kettle must have sung itself hoarse."

Mr. Costello needed no second invitation, and he followed his hostess into her snug back room. There was a bright fire burning in the little Franklin stove, the tea table was sending forth a cloud of steam that took a ruddy glow from the fire-light, the shaded lamp on the table gave a mellow and subdued light to the room, and it was all very suggestive of comfort.

"It's very cosy ye are here, Mrs. Cummiskey," said Mr. Costello, casting a look of approbation around the apartment

"Yes," replied the widow, as she laid the supper, "it is that, whin I do be havin' company."

"Ah," said Mr. Costello, "it must be lonesome for youwith only the cat and yer cup o' tay."

"Sure it is," answered the widow. "But take a sate and set down, Mr. Costello. Help yerself to this fish an' don't forget the purtaties. Look at them; they're splittin' their sides with laughin'."

Mr. Costello helped himself and paused. He looked at the plump widow, with her arm in that graceful position assumed in the pouring out of tea, and remarked, "I'm sinsible of the comforts of a home, Mrs. Cummiskey, though I've none meself. Mind, now, the difference between the tastes o' tay made and sarved that a way and the tay they gives you in an 'ating house."

"Sure," said the widow, "there's nothin' like a little home o' yer own. I wonder yer never got marrit, Mr. Costello."

"I was about to make the same remark in riference to yerself, ma'am," answered Mr. Costello.

"God keep us," exclaimed Mrs. Cummiskey, "aren't I a widder woman this seven year?"

"Ah," rejoined Mr. Costello, "but it's thinkin' I was why ye didn't get marrit again."

"Well, it's sure I am," said the widow, thoughtfully, setting down her teacup and raising her hand by way of emphasis, "there never was a better husband to any woman than him that's dead and gone, heaven save an' rest his sowl. He was that asy a child could do anythin' with him, and he was as humorsome as a monkey. You favor him very much, Mr. Costello. He was about your height, and complected like you."

"Ah!" exclaimed Mr. Costello.

"He often used to say to me in his bantherin' way, 'Sure, Nora, what's the worruld to a man whin his wife is a widder,' manin', you know, that all the timptations an' luxuries of this life can never folly a man beyant the grave. 'Sure, Nora,' says he, 'what's the worruld to a man whin his wife's a widder.' Ah, poor John!"

"It was a sensible sayin', that," remarked Mr. Costello as he helped himself to more fish.

"I mind the day John died," continued the widow. "He knew everything to the last, and about four in the afternoon—it was seventeen minutes past five exactly be the clock that he died—he says to me, 'Nora,' says he, 'you've been a good wife,' says he, 'an' I've been a good husband,' says he, 'an' so there's no love lost between us,' says he, 'an' I could give ye a good charackthur to any place,' says he, 'an' I wish you could do the same for me where I'm goin',' says he, 'but it's case equal,' says he, 'every dog has his day, and some has a day and a-half,' says he, 'an'" says he, 'I'll know more in a bit than Father Corrigan himself,' says he, 'but I'll say now,' says he, 'that I've always been a true son of the church,' says he, 'so I'll not bother my brains about it,' and he says, says he, 'I lave ye in good hands, Nora, for I lave ye in your own hands,' says he, 'and if at any time ye see any wan ye like better nor me, marry him,' says he. 'Ah, Nora,' says he, for the first time speaking it solemn like, 'Ah, Nora, what is the worruld to a man when his wife is a widow? And,' says he,' 'I lave $50 for masses, and the rest I lave to yourself,' said he, 'and I needn't tell ye to be a good mother to the children,' says he, 'for well we know there are none.' Ah, poor John. Will ye have another cup o' tay, Mr. Costello?"

"It must have been very hard on ye," said Mr. Costello. "Thank ye, ma'am, no more."

"It was hard," said Mrs. Cummiskey; "but time will tell. I must cast about me for our own livin'; an' so I got intill this place and here I am to-day."

"Ah!" said Mr. Costello, as they rose from the table and seated themselves before the fire, "an' here we are both of us this evenin'."

"Here we are, sure enough," rejoined the widow.

"An' so I mind ye of—of him, do I?" asked Mr. Costello, after a pause, during which he had gazed contemplatively into the fire.

"That ye do," answered the widow. "Ye favor him greatly. Dark complected and the same plisint smile."

"Now, with me sittin' here, and you sittin' there fernist me, ye might almost think ye were marrit again," said Mr. Costello, insinuatingly.

'Ah, go away now for a taze that ye are," exclaimed the widow, mussing her clean apron by rolling the corners of it.

"I disremember what it was he said about seein' anny man you liked betther nor him," said Mr. Costello, moving his chair a little nearer to that of the widow.

"He said, said he," answered the widow, smoothing her apron over her knees with her plump white hands. "'Nora,' said he, 'if anny time ye see anny man ye like betther nor me, marry him,' says he."

"Did he say anything about anny wan ye liked as good as him," asked Mr. Costello.

"I don't mind that he did," answered the widow, reflectively, folding her hands in her lap.

"I suppose he left that to yerself?" pursued Mr. Costello.

"Faith an' I don't know, thin," answered Mrs. Cummiskey.

"Div ye think ye like me as well as you did him?" asked Mr. Costello, persuasively, leaning forward to look into the widow's eyes, which were cast down.

"Ah, go way now for a taze," exclaimed the widow, straightening herself and playfully slapping Mr. Costello on the face.

He moved his chair still nearer and moved his arm around her waist.

"Niver you think I'm ticklesome, Mr. Costello," said the widow, looking boldly at him.

"Tell me," he insisted, "did ye like me as well as ye did him?"

"I—I most—I most disremember now how much I liked him," answered the widow, naturally embarrassed at such a question.

"Well, then," asked Mr. Costello, enforcing his question by gentle squeezes of the widow's round waist, "div ye like me well enough as meself?"

"Hear the man," exclaimed Mrs. Cummiskey, derisively; "do I like him well enough as himself?"

"Ah, now, don't be breakin' me heart," pleaded Mr. Costello. "Answer me this question, Mrs. Cummiskey, is your heart tender towards me?"

"It is," whispered the widow; "an' there, now ye have it."

"Glory be to God," exclaimed the happy lover, and he drew the not unwilling widow to his bosom.

A few moments after Mrs. Cummiskey looked up, and, as she smoothed her hair, said: "But, Jam-es, you havn't told me yet how ye liked yer tay."

"Ah, Nora, me jewel," answered Mr. Costello, "the taste of that first kiss would take away the taste of all the tay the' ever was brewed."

RELIGION.

O word so sweet, so sad, so blest of men:
As sweet as all the blush and bloom of May;
As sad as moanings of the waves away;
As sad and sweet as song of poet when
His heart nigh breaks and hand scarce holds the pen;
So sweet to cheer when born of love—light, gay.
So sweet when breathing forth the joy of day;
So sad when born in superstition's den!
So sweet to help, to make this life sublime.
So sweet to give us glimpses of our lot;
So sad when lead to persecution's crime;
So sad when earthly friendship is forgot,
So sad and sweet, so sweet and sad in sound.
Blest by all who sweetly sought and found.

Duty Before Pleasure.

From peaceful slumbers Minnie rose
With expectation bright,
For in her home the Christmas morn
Was hailed with much delight.

From lip to lip the smile and kiss
Passed round with greeting kind,
And letters from dear absent ones
Their welfare brought to mind.

And Minnie from her dear papa
Received a glittering prize;—

Large store of glad surprise.

Soon as she might her little chair
Before the fire she drew,
Hoping for long, unbroken hours
To look the pages through.

But now mamma for Minnie calls,
To take a little store
Of comforts to the lowly home
Of poor old Walter Shore.

"See, Minnie, in this basket packed

Are medicine, cake, and tea;
And you might read for him a psalm,
As oft you do for me.

"For Jesus' sake, we should relieve
His poor ones in their need;
He loves a cheerful giver, and Accepts each kindly deed."

A cloud came over Minnie's face,
Hot tears unbidden rose;
'Twas hard her pleasant fireside hour
So hastily should close.

Duty with inclination strove
Poor Minnie's breast within;
She quite forgot how well she meant
This new day to begin.

Shall self-indulgence gain the day?
Or duty barely done
Fail of the sweet, approving smile
By glad obedience won?

Ah, no! from Minnie's brightening brow
The cloud has passed away!
A loving kiss her pardon seals,
And duty gains the day.

No stranger at the cottage door,
She taps with fingers light,
And enters with a smile that seems
Like gleam of sunshine bright.

The welcome gift, the message kind
That told of Christian love,
Woke gladness in the sick man's heart,
And drew his thoughts above.

And as she read the sweet, sweet words,
By Israel's Psalmist sung,
"Yes," said poor Walter, "me He leads
His pastures green among.

"My daily wants He still provides,
And doth my soul restore;
Now all I need is grateful love
To serve and praise Him more."

As Minnie trod her homeward path,
Her mission well fulfilled,
Though chilling snowflakes fell around,
Her heart with gladness thrilled.

For now she proved that duty brings
True pleasure in its train,
While those who first for pleasure seek
Too often find but pain.

Much brighter then the fire side hour,
From interruption free,
To scan her new, delightsome book
Beside her mother's knee.

And oft, when inclination seeks
From duty's path to stray,
Minnie recalls her mission walk
That snowy Christmas day.

KEEPING UP APPEARANCES.—A member of the sanitary police force came across a boy the other day who was wheeling home a load of oyster cans and bottles, and curious to know what use the lad could put them to, he made a direct inquiry.

"Going to throw them over into our back yard," replied the boy. "I took two loads home yesterday."

"But what do you use 'em for?"

"It's a trick of the family," grinned the lad.

"How trick?"

"I'd just as lief tell," continued the boy, as he spit on his hands to resume his hold of the barrow. "We're going to have some relashuns come in from the country. We may not have much to eat, but if they see these cans and bottles and boxes they'll think we've had isters, champagne, figs and nuts till we've got tired of 'em and are living on bread and taters for a healthy change!"

The officer scratched his ear like a man who had received a new idea.—Detroit Free Press.

The May-Pole in England.

Great were the doings in old time around the May-pole, for which the tallest tree was selected. It was drawn to its place by as many as thirty or forty yoke of oxen, their horns decorated with flowers, followed by all the lads and lassies of the village. The pole was wound or painted with gay colors, and trimmed with gay garlands, bright handkerchiefs, and ribbon streamers, from top to bottom.

With great ceremonies, and shouts of joy, it was lifted to its place by ropes and pullies, and set up firmly in the ground; and then the people joined hands and danced around it. The whole day was given up to merriment, every one dressed in holiday attire, doors and windows were adorned with green boughs and flowers, the bells rang, processions of people in grotesque dresses were arranged, and the famous Morris dancers performed.

In this dance the people assumed certain characters. There was always Robin Hood, the great hero of the rustics; Maid Marian, the queen, with gilt crown on her head; Friar Tuck, a fool, with his fool's-cap and bells; and above all, the hobby-horse. This animal was made of paste-board, painted a sort of pink color, and propelled by a man inside, who made him to perform various tricks not common to horses, such as threading a needle and holding a ladle in his mouth for pennies.

The various characters labored to support their parts. The friar gave solemn advice, the queen imitated lady-like manners, the fool joked and made fun, and the horse pranced in true horsey style.

This Morris dance is supposed to have been brought in early times from Spain, where the Moors danced it, and where it still survives as the "fandango."

In other places, wreaths were made on hoops, with a gayly-dressed doll in the middle of each, and carried about by girls, the little owners singing a ballad which had been sung since the time of Queen Bess—and expecting a shower of pennies, of course.

All this May-day merriment came to an end when our grim Puritan fathers had power in England. Dancing around the May-pole looked to them like heathen adoration of an idol. Parliament made a law against it, and all the May-poles in the Island were laid in the dust. The common people had their turn, when, a few years later, under a new king, the prohibitory law was repealed, and a new May-pole, the highest ever in England (one hundred and thirty-four feet) was set up in the Strand, London, with great pomp. But the English people were fast outgrowing the sport, and the customs have been dying out ever since. Now, a very few May-poles in obscure villages are all that can be found.—Oliver Thorne, in St. Nicholas.

Advice to Correspondents.

Never write with pen or ink. It is altogether too plain, and doesn't hold the minds of the editor and printers closely enough to their work.

Don't punctuate. We prefer to punctuate all manuscript sent to us. And don't use capitals. Then we can punctuate and capitalize to suit ourself, and your article, when you see it in print, will astonish even if it does not please you.

Don't try to write too plainly. Poor writing is an indication of genius. It's about the only indication of genius that a great many men possess. Scrawl your article with your eyes shut and make every word as illegible as you can. We get the same price for it from the rag man as though it were covered with copper-plate sentences.

Avoid all painstaking with proper names. We know the full name of every man, woman and child in the United States, and the merest hint at the name is sufficient. For instance, if you write a character something like a drunken figure "8," and then draw a wavy line, we will know at once that you mean "Samuel Morrison," even though you may think you mean "Lemuel Messenger."

Always write on both sides of the paper, and when you have filled both sides of every page, rail a line up and down every margin, and back to the top of the first page, closing your article by writing the signature just above the date. How we do love to get hold of articles written in this style. And how we would like to get hold of the man who sends them. Just for ten minutes. Alone. In the woods, with a cannon in our hip pocket.

Coarse brown wrapping paper is the best for writing your articles on. If you can tear down an old circus poster, and write on the pasty side of it with a pen stick, it will do still better.

When your article is completed, crunch your paper in your pocket and carry it two or three days before sending it. This rubs off the superfluous pencil marks, and makes it lighter to handle.

If you can think of it, lose one page out of the middle of your article. We can easily supply what is missing, and we love to do it. We have nothing else to do.—Burlington Hawkeye.

TALKING.

You cram these words into mine ears against
The stomach of my sense.

Unearthly Visitors.

THE FOUR QUEER COMPANIONS.

Cibber, the actor and dramatist, in company with three friends, once made an excursion. Cibber had a false set of teeth; one of his friends a glass eye; a second friend a cork leg; but the third had nothing particular, except a remarkable way of shaking his head. They traveled in a post-coach, and while at the first stage, after each had made merry with his neighbor's infirmity, they agreed that at each baiting place they would all affect the same singularity. When they came to breakfast they all squinted, and, as the countrymen stood gaping round, when they alighted:

"Od rot it!" cried one, "how that man squints!"

"Why," said a second, "here be another squinting fellow!"

The third was thought to be a better squinter than the other two, and the fourth better than all the rest. In short, language cannot express how admirably they all squinted—for they went one degree beyond the superlative. At dinner they appeared to have cork legs: and their stumping about made more diversion than at breakfast. At tea they were all deaf; but at supper, which was at the Ship, at Dover, each man resumed his character, the better to play his part in a farce they had concerted among them. When they were ready to go to bed, Cibber called out to the waiter:

"Here, you fellow! take out my teeth."

"Teeth, sir?" said the man.

"Ay, teeth, sir! Unscrew that wire, and they'll all come out together."

After some hesitation, the man did as he was ordered. Then another called out:

"Here, you! take out my eye!"

"Lor', sir!" said the waiter, "your eye!"

"Yes, my eye! Come here, you stupid dog! Pull up that eyelid, and it will come out as easily as possible."

This done, the third cried out:

"Here, you rascal! Take off my leg!"

This the waiter did with less reluctance, having been before apprised that it was a cork, and also conceiving that it would be his last job. He was, however, mistaken. The fourth watched his opportunity, and while the frightened waiter was surveying with rueful countenance the eye, teeth and leg lying on the table, cried out in a frightened, hollow voice:

"Come here, sir—take off my head!"

Turning round, and seeing the man's head shaking like that of a mandaran upon a chimney-piece, he darted out of the room, and after stumbling headlong down stairs, ran about the house swearing that the gentlemen above stairs were certainly all devils.

Uncounted Blessings.

BY EBEN E. REXFORD.

I sometimes tire of making vain endeavor
For things I never win, though sought so long,
And wonder if my pains must fail forever,
And minor chords creep into life's low song,
Until my heart is heavy with its sorrow,
As things beyond me always far away,
Keep beckoning on and whispering "To-morrow!"
But never hold the music of "To day."

The things just out of reach seem always fairer
Than anything to-day can have and hold;
To-morrow's sunshine will be brighter, rarer,—
And so we miss the present hour's gold.
To-day is lost in dreaming of To-morrow,
And when to-morrow comes the heart will lay
Plans for the future, thinking o'er in sorrow,
The squandered blessings of the yesterday.

We lose the little joys of life forever,
In thinking of the far-off unattained.
And by-and-by, when fainting hope says "Never,"
For what we've missed life's long regret is gained
If we could take life's blessings as we find them,
Making the most of bright or cloudy days,
Departing, they would leave content behind them,
And vague unrest be banished from our ways.

ROMANCE OF A PAIR OF BOOTS.

BY MARY REED CROWELL.

A tall, haughty, beautiful girl, with a complexion as fair as the velvety petals of a pale blush rose and great flashing black eyes—with lustrous black hair, and a dimpled mouth, that was very enchanting when she smiled, and equally bewitching when in grave repose.

Her name was Estelle Regis, and she was reigning belle of her set in all respects but one—she had no fortune beyond the wealth of beauty in face and form—that beauty over which many a man had gone distracted, and which Miss Regis, at twenty-two, had learned to thoroughly appreciate and value.

Although not rich, she had all her life lived in luxury and magnificence, until it had come to be so natural to her to drive in her carriage—or her uncle's carriage—and wear imported dresses, and give and attend fine parties, that long ago she had deliberately made up her mind that it was her duty to herself to secure a continuance of such good things by marrying money.

It was a curious arrangement her uncle had made with her, when Estelle was hardly more than a child, living in obscurity and comfort away down in a quiet country village, where her uncle had come to visit her mother on his return from a twenty years' absence abroad.

"I'll tell you what I'll do for you, Mary," he had said to his sister, a pale, worn, delicate creature, who was a sufficiently good manager to make her small income meet the wants of her two children and herself—"I'll tell you what I'll do. Let me take this oldest girl here—she's about ten or eleven, isn't she?—this one with the promise of such magnificent beauty. Let me take her back to New York with me, where I'm building a house, and where she shall be as my own child. There'll be servants, and fine clothes, and horses, and plenty of money. I'll educate her, and dress her, and give her a taste of life, and marry her off when the time comes. In return, I'll settle a thousand dollars a year on you, Mary, and we'll all be quite happy. What do you say?"

Of course, Mrs. Regis told the bright-eyed girl of her uncle's magnificent offer, and Estelle accepted it instantly.

"Why, mamma, indeed I'll go with uncle Robert! Only just think how elegant it will be to be rich and have everything I want!"

So it happened that Estelle was taken back to the New York mansion to a life of luxury and princely magnificence.

"For so long as she shall be single, you understand, Mary," Mr. Regis said, when he was finally arranging affairs. "And there's another thing—I shall give my niece to know that she need expect nothing at my death. I'll have nobody waiting for dead men's shoes at my house. You'll have your income as long as you live, and my will will leave every dollar toward building and endowing the 'Regis Home for Sewing Girls,' so we shall start on a plain knowledge of just how things are, and are to be."

All this had been decided and talked over years and years ago; and at eighteen, Estelle had made up her mind that she would use her charms to win her a fortune with a husband; and at twenty-two, when she was in all her flush and glory of perfect womanhood, she had met the Prince Charming in whom was combined all the qualities she coveted—manly excellence, established position in society, immense wealth, and personal beauty equal to her own.

"He likes me already better than any one else," Estelle would tell herself, truly; for Mr. St. Cyr had many a time found himself admiring Estelle's beauty, and grace, and winsomeness. "He likes me, and I will move heaven and earth but what I will win him," she said, eagerly, over and over again; and her beautiful dark eyes flashed as she thought of his handsome face, and her heart would throb at memory of his low, sweet voice, that, although it had never yet spoken love-words to her, seemed in a very fair way so to do.

This fair October day she was thinking more ardently than usual of Stewart St. Cyr, perhaps because of the grand event of the early fall season which was to come off so soon; and for which she was so busy directing envelopes, on one of which her tiny gold pen lingered so tenderly as she wrote the name of the man she coveted—the moonlight fete and reception Mr. Regis had authorized her to give on her birthday celebration.

"I wonder why it is I experience such unusual solicitude? Is it possible that there is in store for me the happiness of my life? Is it foolishly silly in me to wonder if he will speak?"

And then she touched his written name with her red lips, and sent it away by the footman, with scores of others, for delivery.

* * * * * * *

Broadway was like a living panorama that cool, bright October afternoon, and Stewart St. Cyr walked leisurely along, enjoying the fresh, delicious air, the red-gold haze of sunshine that softened every object into new, subdued beauty—watching the pretty women as they passed, elaborate in their toilet, elegant in their manner.

He was a splendid-looking fellow—tall, finely-modeled, with an air of aristocratic elegance about him that plainly bespoke his birth and breeding, and social position.

He sauntered leisurely along up Broadway, then suddenly remembered an errand he wanted to do, and turned into Grand Street, where his bootmaker did business, and whose services he required, in view of the reception he proposed attending, given by Miss Regis, and the invitation to which had reached him the day before.

So he strolled into the store, where there were but one or two customers in waiting, and nodded, with his pleasant, easy familiarity, to the proprietor.

"Fine afternoon, Porter. Have you any low shoes on hand—my style, you know? Or shall you have to make them?"

Every one looked up at sound of his cheery, musical voice, and Stewart St. Cyr met the direct glance of a pair of the softest, sweetest brown eyes he ever had seen in his life—soft, shining, yet shadowy brown eyes, set in a dainty brunette face, that was framed by darkly-golden brown hair, that had a rose-bud of a mouth, closed in sweet gravity, that had a deep dimple in the rounded chin.

There was no sign of a flush on the girl's face as her eyes met Stewart St. Cyr's—no consciousness that there was admiration in his respectful gaze, and she turned her head away to finish contemplating the daintily-booted little foot extended beyond her dress.

And then Stewart St. Cyr saw how unmistakably shabby her dress was; how gray the once black alpaca had become, evidently through much wearing; how pitifully often the little gray gloves had been mended; how exceedingly plain were the black velvet-banded straw hat and velvet-trimmed jacket.

And he noticed, too, how exquisitely white were the linen collar and cuffs; how faultlessly smooth and modest the coiffure; how entirely free from any attempt at cheap finery was the girlish toilet.

Then he looked at her foot, small, well-shaped, high-arched; and then her voice, low, sweet as rippling waters—a pure contralto voice—reached him.

"They fit nicely, and I like them, but I am afraid they are too expensive."

The young fellow in attendance seemed in no way averse to keep his customer.

"Not high at all, I assure you. They are Burt's best—only eight dollars—eight and a half anywhere else."

The sweet voice instantly answered:

"I cannot think of giving anywhere near so much. I did not know you were showing me Burt's. Please let me see something much cheaper."

There was a little ring of resolution in her voice that St. Cyr liked. It was so different from the women he was used to hear talk.

"How high would you like to go? Five—six dollars? There's nothing fit for you under five dollars, miss."

Then St. Cyr, saw a little pink tinge creep over the cheek near him.

"Have you nothing for three, or three and a half?"

The salesman answered, short and quick:

"Nothing you would wear—no ladies' sewed shoes. We can give you heavy boots, shop-stock, miss, pegged soles, but then—"

The flush died suddenly away off her cheeks, and the ring in her voice returned.

"I cannot give over three dollars and a half. I will take the best you have for that price."

And St. Cyr felt a strange pity at his heart for this fair, delicate young creature, who was obliged to wear such unfit shoes, while he rolled in luxury; while so many other girls, hardly more dainty and refined in manner—and the thought of Estelle Regis flashed over him in sharp contrast—gave never a thought as to how their elegancies came to them.

Then he heard her say she would take the pair she had last fitted on; then, while he was pretending deep, absorbed interest in his own case of trying on, he heard the cold, half-insolent tones of the salesman:

"This bill isn't good, miss."

"Not good?" It was all she said, but her face flamed pitifully under the clerk's half-sarcastic, half-indignant glance. "It was given to me as good, and I took it in good faith."

"I can't help that—it's counterfeit!"

"But it is all I have. I—I will not take the boots home to-day."

St. Cyr saw her agitation, her evident mortification. He saw how she was trembling, how her lovely eyes were cloudy with distress, that was fighting with pride and disappointment. Then he lifted his hat courteously to her, and their eyes met again.

"If you will pardon me, I will be happy to lend you the money for your boots, until you can reach home. You can return it to my address."

It was so plainly straightforward, and manly, and honest. His glance was so respectful, his manner so thoroughly that of a gentleman. And, with a little hesitation, while the rich color suffused her face, to leave it deathly pale again, she quietly bowed.

"I thank you. I need the boots very much, and I will accept your loan until to-morrow."

And when St. Cyr laid a crisp, new bill on the counter, in lieu of the counterfeit one, that was quickly returned to the girl's tiny pocket-book, he wondered if he should ever see such sweet, sad eyes again.

He gave her his card, and she went out of the store, graceful, dignified, yet bearing the marks of the mortified pride even in her quiet, lady-like carriage.

The salesman looked after her.

"Pretty girl, Mr. St. Cyr!"

And Stewart St. Cyr looked straight in the fellow's eyes.

"A thoroughbred lady, if ever I saw one!"

* * * * * * * *

The daintily-elegant little room which Estelle Regis had glorified into her "boudoir" was curtained off from the morning parlor by draperies of pale rose silk, that hung from the silver-starred ceiling in heavy, fluted folds; and it was in that exquisitely-beautiful little apartment that Estelle was sitting, looking like some princess of the blood royal in her haughty, superb beauty, that was heightened by the morning dress of white cashmere she wore.

She was half expecting Mr. St. Cyr to call—at least he had intimated that, if he had an opportunity, he would drop in; and, in consequence of the sweet anticipation, her eyes were tender, her mouth curving with happy smiles—tenderness and sweetness that suddenly disappeared when the liveried footman rapped on the door, and ushered carelessly in a slender, graceful girl, with lovely, wistful, brown eyes, and a sweet, sensitive mouth, and a voice like music as she spoke.

"Please pardon me, Miss Regis, for intruding, but it was very necessary I should come. I am very, very much in need of money, and no one owes me anything but you, and I have come to ask you to pay me."

Estelle swept angrily around.

"Amy Severn! Didn't I tell you distinctly, when you came here last—not a week ago, when I paid you five dollars on account—that I should give you no more just now? How ever you have the impudence to force your way here, to my private room, to demand money, is more than I can see. I shall give Jackson orders not to admit you again."

Miss Severn's cheeks flushed.

"If you choose to pay me now, I will not trouble you again, I assure you. As for the five-dollar bill you gave me, Miss Regis, it is not good. It is a counterfeit—although, of course, you did not know that. You will certainly make it good to me, if you do no more?"

Estelle gave an exclamation of rage.

"Counterfeit? I gave you a counterfeit bill? You insolent, outrageous creature you! As if I ever had a bill that wasn't good! How dare you attempt to impose upon me, you—you bold thing you? You know perfectly well it is false! I give you a bad bill! You dare come ask me to make it good!"

Amy was trembling from head to foot, but her eyes had in them a flash of hauteur equal to Estelle's own.

"I have not so many bills at a time but that I know perfectly well where they come from. You certainly gave me the bill, which has been refused at a store. Of course, Miss Regis, you have it in your power to defraud me of it. If you think I can afford to lose it better than yourself, very well!"

She turned to go, with a mien of quiet dignity that would not have disgraced a duchess, and almost walked into Stewart St. Cyr's arms.

"I beg your pardon. Jackson said I should find you here, Miss Regis. Miss Severn—you will allow me to use the name I have just learned, to my great satisfaction—Miss Severn, I am glad I have had this opportunity of again seeing you, and being able to corroborate at least part of your story."

And, while Amy Severn stood pale and quiet, Estelle Regis stared with flashing eyes and flaming cheeks.

"I really am at a loss—" she began, but St. Cyr interrupted her.

"Pardon me, Miss Regis! This young lady, Miss Severn—whom I hope I have the honor of daring to call a friend—demands my first attention. If you will allow me to escort you home, Miss Severn, I will see Miss Regis later, when perhaps she will find it convenient to pay you what she owes you."

And the elegant gentleman, whom all the aristocratic belles of Murray Hill adored, walked home with Amy Severn to her cheap boarding-house, from which, three months later, he married her, to take her to his beautiful home, where her position as Mrs. Stewart St. Cyr enables her to queen it in society, directly over Estelle Regis' head, who hates and envies her as only women can despise and be jealous of—a successful rival!

While, in a little closet, where no one ever goes but Amy, there is a shelf where stands a pair of tiny, clumsy boots, very unlike the delicate imported bottines Mrs. St. Cyr wears; and beside them, in a wretched little pocket-book, a counterfeit five-dollar bill, and a business-card bearing Stewart St. Cyr's name.

And they are the signs of one woman's romance.

Somebody's Mother.

The woman was old, and ragged, and gray,
And bent with the chill of the winter's day;

The street was wet with a recent snow,
And the woman's feet were aged and slow,

She stood at the crossing and waited long,
Alone, uncared for, amid the throng

Of human beings who passed her by,
Nor heeded the glance of her anxious eye.

Down the street, with laughter and shout,
Glad in the freedom of "school let out,"

Came the boys like a flock of sheep,
Hailing the snow piled white and deep.

Past the woman so old and gray
Hastened the children on their way,

Nor offered a helping hand to her,
So meek, so timid, afraid to stir,

Lest the carriage-wheels or the horses' feet
Should crowd her down in the slippery street.

At last came one of the merry troop—
The gayest laddie of all the group,—

He paused beside her and whispered low,
"I'll help you across if you wish to go."

Her aged hand on his strong young arm
She placed, and so, without hurt or harm,

He guided the trembling feet along,
Proud that his own were firm and strong.

Then back again to his friends he went,
His young heart happy and well content.

"She's somebody's mother, boys, you know,
For all she's aged and poor and slow;

And I hope some fellow will lend a hand
To help my mother, you understand,

If ever she's poor, and old, and gray,
When her own dear boy is far away."

And somebody's mother bowed low her head
In her home that night and the prayer she said

Was, "God be kind to the noble boy,
Who is somebody's son and pride and joy."

Taxation.

Let it be fully understood, as it can be easily demonstrated, that the burden of taxation does not at all come from education—from the cost of schools and the employment of competent men and women as teachers. Taxation comes from ignorance, from incompetence, from crime and pauperism from the lack or want of education. If the people who pay the taxes were enlightened upon these points—if our teachers would take the facts as they exist, and use them, it would disarm very much of the prejudice which is created by the cry of hard times and high taxes on account of schools.

Intelligent people produce more than they consume. Intelligence begets industry, and when people earn money they save it, and invest it.

The small-fry politicians use this plea of high taxes—and the first thing they strike at is the school system. The wages of our teachers are reduced. Nothing is said of the amount of money stolen. Nothing is said of the cost of sustaining courts, constables, jails and prisons—of the time and labor lost by the want of knowing how to do something.

Intelligence pays; ignorance costs; property pays the cost of ignorance, and of crime all the time.

There is a question of productive industry and of sound political economy entering into good schools or poor schools, which ought to command immediate and persistent attention.—American Journal of Education.

AGAIN.

So soon, so soon, the Summer leaves are turning
To red and crimson, gold and russet brown,
So soon again the maple's fires are burning,
Lighting the hilltops like a burnished crown,—
Far off within the shadowy mist
Gleam purple, gold and amethyst.

So soon, so soon, the Summer leaves are dying,
The fair, green leaves that lived their little day
In joyous freedom, now around us lying,
Fading like many an earthly joy away,—
And flutt'ring thro' the charmed air
Trail golden splendors everywhere.

All gorgeous hues, all dyes of Tyrian splendor
Blossom and burn beneath the Master's hand,
They thrill us, fill us with a joy so tender
We reverent walk, as in some sacred land;
Or stand with clasped hands to gaze
Upon the glory of these sad, sweet days.

Oh! far-off hills, methinks your misty glory
Leads upward to the Eternal hills of Gold,
Where earth's decay, nor sin's unhallowed story
Can vex nor mar the souls that ne'er grow old.
Oh! Summer Land, we long for thee,
Bend down that we thy gates may see.

JUDGE NOT IN HASTE.

Ne'er be hasty in your judgment,
Never foremost to extend
Evil mention to a neighbor,
Or of one you've called a friend.
Of two reasons for an action,
Choose the better, not the worst;
Never let the meaner motive
Be the one you urge the first;
But be gentle with misfortune,
Never foremost to extend
Evil mention of a neighbor,
Or of one you've called a friend.

A BUTTERCUP.

A little yellow buttercup
Stood laughing in the sun;
The grass all green around it,
The summer just begun;
Its saucy little head abrim
With happiness and fun.

Near by—grown old, and gone to seed,
A dandelion grew;
To right and left with every breeze
His snowy tresses flew.
He shook his hoary head, and said:
"I've some advice for you.

Don't think, because you're yellow now,
That golden days will last;
I was as gay as you are, once,
But now my youth is past.
This day will be my last to bloom;
The hours are going fast.

"Perhaps your fun may last a week,
But then you'll have to die."
The dandelion ceased to speak,—
A breeze that capered by Snatched all the white hair from his head,
And wafted it on high.

His yellow neighbor first looked sad,
Then cheering up, he said:
"If one's to live in fear of death,
One might as well be dead."
The little buttercup laughed on,
And waved his golden head.

St. Nicholas.

The Christ-Child.

Come hither, little children!
Draw closer 'round my knee,
For one brief moment silence
Your noisy shouts of glee;
And gazing on your faces,
So blithesome and so gay,
I'll tell you what once happened
Upon a Christmas day.

In a far distant country,
On such another morn,
In a stable rough and cheerless,
A little child was born.
There were no costly trappings
As in some lordly hall,
But sturdy beasts of burden
Stood each within its stall.

The gentle, patient cattle,
With eyes so calm and mild,
Gazed with half-human glances
Upon the little child.
No servant bent above him,
No vassal hailed his birth,
And yet no prince so mighty
E'er lived upon the earth!

No purple and fine linen,
No royal robes he had;
But in the coarsest garments
His tender form was clad.
The one whose birth the prophets,
Judea's seers, foresaw,
Was laid within a manger,
Upon the oaten straw.

But there was great rejoicing
Upon that early morn—
The angels sang in heaven
The hour the child was born.
And shepherds in the valley,
Who watched the whole night long,
Saw in the blazing heavens
The joyous angel throng.

They heard the angel-chorus,
And thus the carol ran:
"Now glory in the highest,
On earth be peace to man!
To man is born a Saviour,
To earth is born her King,
Hosannah in the highest
To Christ the Lord we bring!"

And now to-day, O children,
No name so great we know
As that which angels chorused
The morn so long ago.
We keep this day rejoicing
With thankful hearts for aye;
For Jesus Christ our Saviour
Was born on Christmas Day!

A SONG.

BY MRS. BROWNING.

Weep, as if you thought of laughter!
Smile, as tears were coming after!
Marry your pleasures to your woes;
And think life's green well worth its rose!

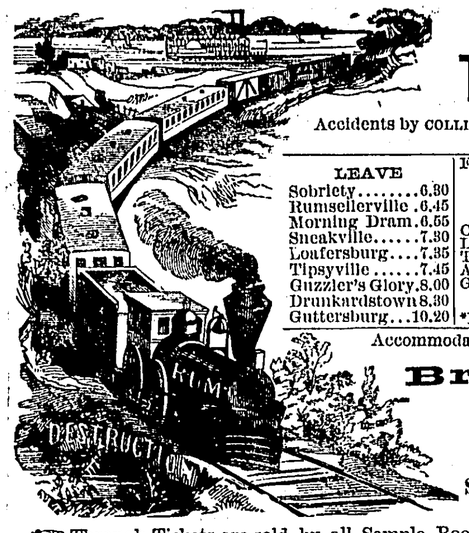

No sorrow will your heart betide
Without a comfort by its side;
The sun may sleep in his sea bed,
But you have starlight over head.

Trust not to joy! the rose of June,
When opened wide, will wither soon;
Italian days without twilight
Will turn them suddenly to night.

Joy, most changeful of all things,
Flits away on rainbow wings;
And when they look the gayest, know
It is that they are spread to go.

Superintendent.

☞ Through Tickets are sold by all Sample Rooms and Rum Holes, they being our only authorized agents.

☞ The rates of fare are higher by this than any other route, but the speed with which the journey is accomplished more than compensates for difference in fare.

☞ All trains are through trains, and passengers by this route were never known to fail in making connections.

☞ All trains will stop at Reformationburg or Temperancetown, if passengers desire to leave at either of these stations. But all persons so stopping will forfeit their through ticket to Sulphurdom.

☞ Sleeping cars are provided for through passengers, who will be awakened frequently, that an opportunity for alcoholic refreshments may be given.

☞ The conductor of the morning Jersey Lightning Express is Satan Devil, Esq., well known to the traveling public who patronize our line, and popular at the principal stations on the Dead River Line.

☞ Persons living in the vicinity of this Road must "look out for the engine," as no bell is rung or brakesmen employed below Guttersburg, and the Company disclaim all responsibility for damages.

☞ Baggage or clothing taken as security for passage; a pawnbroker accompanying every train. Any passenger discovered on board without money, ticket or security, will be immediately thrown off without stopping the train.

☞ At Poison Switch a short branch road leads to Perdition Camp, and at Suicide's Tunnel a junction is made with the Destruction River Railway.

☞ Special trains will be despatched at any time, on application made to the Superintendent, for political conventions, pic-nic parties, and all associations owing allegiance to King Gambrinus or King Alcohol.

Break of Day.

FROM A LADY'S NOTE-BOOK.

A full choir is not perfected till every musician has tuned his instrument. That we are not in tune, is no reason why nature should be out.

Now comes the first streak of the gray dawn, when the swarthy angels of pain and darkness take flight, and each leaf shivers with a happy activity. Then pipes the little bird for food, like a babe after a long night of slumber, while the last bright star goes out in paleness. Now the garment of day is fully unfolded, and its rose and azure tints envelope us. The coarser sounds of barnyard music challenges our ears—if anything which nature does can be called coarse—the bleating of the sheep, the lowing of the cows, the roar of the bull, and the rough welcome of the wide-awake house dog. The matin song of the children and the chickens has begun. Both must be attended to, and that right early. The plough-boys's whistle and the housemaid's laughter join in the chorus. The horse sniffs and sports, as his stable door is opened, for the welcome breeze and the morning light. Old chanticleer mounts the tallest heap, and inquires if we are all ready.

We are ready for the day's toils and troubles, which had well-nigh overcome us when we were struggling with the fiends of pain and darkness. Ready, if it be Heaven's will, to stay and bear. Ready, if it be Heaven's will, to close our eyes and go; close them on all this beauty of earth, and sea and sky; close them upon loving looks, and tender words, and grieving hearts, knowing that there is a resurrection morn fairer than any which we have here so faintly foreshadowed.

There comes an autumn to all this, as there comes an autumn to our lives. The friends of our youth are gone; new faces, new customs, new manners, new fashions—last, but not least, new faiths, pass like a panorama before us. We have made our choice; suffice it to say, it was not so in "our day;" and we are ready with the harvest sheaves of our faith and our time to be gathered in, and the great reaper stands waiting.

Nature has redeemed all the promises of our youth to us. To those who love her she will never become bankrupt. Her serene moonlight, the rosy sunset and sunrise, the incense of her flowers, and the melody of her myriad voices, will comfort other ears, as they have ours, ages yet to come.

THE LOVED AND LOST.

The loved and lost! Why do we call them lost?
Because we miss them from our onward road?
God's unseen angel o'er our pathway crost,
Looked on us all, and loving them the most,
Straightway relieved them from life's weary load.

They are not lost; they are within the door
That shuts out loss, and every hurtful thing—
With angels bright, and loved ones gone before,
In their Redeemer's presence evermore,
And God Himself, their Lord, and Judge and King.

And this we call a loss! O selfish sorrow
Of selfish hearts! O we of little faith;
Let us look round, argument to borrow
Why we in patience should await the morrow
That surely must succeed this night of death.

Aye, look upon this dreary desert path,
The thorns and thistles wheresoe'er we turn;
What trials and what tears, what wrongs and wrath,
What struggles and what strife the journey hath!
They have escaped from these; and so we mourn.

Ask the poor sailor, when the wreck is done,
Who with his treasures strove the shore to reach,
While with the raging wave he battled on,
Was it not joy, when every joy seemed gone,
To see his loved ones landed on the beach?

A poor wayfarer, leading by the hand
A little child, had halted by the well
To wash from off her feet the clinging sand,
And tell the tired boy of that bright land
Where, this long journey past, they longed to dwell.

When lo! the Lord, who many mansions had,
Drew near and looked upon the suffering twain,
Then pitying spake, "Give me the little lad;
In strength renewed, and glorious beauty clad,
I'll bring him with me when I come again."

Did she make answer selfishly and wrong—
"Nay, but the woes I feel he, too, must share!"
Or rather, bursting into grateful song,
She went her way rejoicing, and made strong
To struggle on, since he was freed from care.

We will do likewise, death hath made no breach
In love and sympathy, in hope and trust,
No outward sign or sound our ears can reach,
But there's an inward, spiritual speech
That greets us still, though mortal tongues be dust.

It bids us do the work they laid down—
Take up the song where they broke off the strain;
So journeying till we reach the heavenly town,
Where are laid up our treasures and our crown,
And our lost loved ones will be found again.

ELLA AND THE RABBIT.

Where ripening wheat-ears gently swayed
Against the cloudless, summer sky,
Among the flowers, alone she played,
Ner heeded how the hours went by;
With wealth of gold she sat confused—
I know not if she dreamt or mused.

Till lo! at a rustling, crisp and swift,
More strange than wind had stirred since morn,
Her drowsy head she needs must lift,
For there above the parted corn
A rabbit peered, with head aloft,
And eyes so wild, and yet so soft!

Away he rushed, again he came,
Each time more fearless and content;
And thus they played a quiet game,
Till the elm-tree over the corn-field sent
Its straggling shadow long and deep,
And the wheat-ears swayed themselves to sleep.

Said Ella, "Homeward must I go,
So, frolicsome playmate, fare you well.
Your pretty, dark-brown head I'll know
In open field and flowery dell;
And fain, some time, would I repay
Your trust through this long, summer day.

"E'en if my face no more you see,
A friend I'll prove, still fond and true,
For I have sturdy brothers three,
Who wait to capture such as you;
With many a smile, and tear, and prayer,
I'll make them vow your life to spare."

Three brothers went out one gloomy day,
When the corn had long been gathered in,
And they suffered a rabbit to bound away,
Right through the stubble moist and thin;
And another brown one they let pass,
All reckless, over a field of grass.

For much they held to a promise made,
And never could they rightly know
If it were Ella's friend that strayed,
So the brown ones still went to and fro;
And, spoken for one, a loving thought
The safety of a number wrought.

AT EVENING TIME.

At evening time there shall be light!
So spake the Master, and down thro' the years,
Comes the sweet promise to our weary hearts,
Bids us be quiet and forget our fears,
Tells us of heavenly light as day departs.

At evening time there shall be light!
At evening time; what though the day be long,
And seem to us poor mortals passing slow;
Shall we not cheer our journey with a song?
Eve will bring light, not darkness; joy, not woe.

At evening time there shall be light!
There shall be; do we doubt the promise given,
Discard the shall be, and insert a may?
Or lose our faith, and thus our hope of heaven,
When God says then shall come the perfect day?

At evening time there shall be light!
Light; heavenly light; God's light; sweet and sublime.
E'en though we deem the light of life as fair,
'Tis as a shadow, when the light divine
Floods us with radiance and dispels all care.

At evening time there shall be light!
What sweeter, holier promise could be given,
To cheer the weary when the way is dark?
O let us mingle this with thoughts of heaven,
And wait for light, when dim life's flickering spark.

OUR CHOIR.

There's Jane Sophia,
And Anna Maria,
With Obadiah,
And Zedekiah,
In our choir.

And Jane Sophia soprano sings
So high, you'd think her voice had wings
To soar above all earthly things,
When she leads off on Sunday;
While Anna Maria's alto choice
Rings out in such harmonious voice,
That sinners in the church rejoice,
And wish she'd sing till Monday.

Then Obadiah's tenor high
Is unsurpassed beneath the sky;
Just hear him sing "Sweet by and by,"
And you will sit in wonder;
While Zedekiah's bass profound
Goes down so low it jars the ground,
And wakes the echoes miles around,
Like distant rolling thunder.

Talk not to us of Patti's fame,
Or Nicolini's tenor fame,
Or Cary's contralto—but a name—
Or Whitney's pond'rous basso!
They sing no more like Jane Sophia,
And Anna Maria, Obadiah,
And Zedekiah in our choir,
Than cats sing like Tomasso.

A MORNING SONG.

A MORNING SONG.

Up, sleeper! dreamer, up! for now
There's gold upon the mountain's brow;
There's light on forests, lakes, and meadows;
The dew-drops shine on flow'ret bells;
The village clock of morning tells.
Up, meadow-out, cattle! for the dells
And dingles team with shadows.

The very beast that crops the flower
With welcome for the dawning hour.
Aurora smiles—her beckonings claim thee.
Listen—look round! The chirp, the hum,
Song, low, and bleat—there's nothing dumb;
All love, all life! Come, slumberers, come!
The meanest thing shall shame thee.

The Caliph and His Slave.

Hussin, the son of Ali—may his name
Bring all the prophet's foes to grief and shame—
Sat learning from the Koran's holy page
How to be just, benificent and sage.
An ill-starred slave approached the Caliph dread,
Near the divan, was lifting o'er his head
A bowl that hold a draught hot, spic'd and sweet,
It fell and broke before his master's feet.
In pain the Caliph turned him from his book,
And fix'd upon the slave a steady look—
His eyes shot forth no anger-flashing gleam,
Benignity was living in their beam.
Quick at his feet the slave beseeching fell,
And thus repeated from the Koran well:
"For those who rage subdue, in mercy's guise Prepar'd is their high place in Paradise."
"No passion have I from my soul to rend."
"Also for those who pardon who offend,"
The slave repeated. "Then forgiven be,"
Said Hussein, "now I freely pardon thee."
"But specially by Allah are belov'd
All those to charity and goodness mov'd."
The verse was finished, and the quoter paus'd
To note the quick effect his sentence caus'd.
"Go," answer'd Hussein, promptly, "thou art free,
And with thy freedom take this gold from me."

ADRIFT.

Adrift with the tide, it beareth me
On, on, I know not where,
To what far port, to what dim sea,
I neither know nor care.

What future fates before me lie
Are hidden from my sight;
I only drift, no power have I,
To steer my bark aright.

Through awful gloom of starless night,
Through days of fiercest glare,
Through peaceful scenes, through fearful sights,
I drift, I know not where.

Bewildering maze! and can it be
This is the path by God designed?
It leads perchance—I cannot see—
To something it were well to find.

And so, as one who walks in doubt,
And oft, from time to time looks back,
I wander on, yet ne'er without
An inward knowledge of the track.

It is, as if in the dim past,
I had upon the summit stood,
And seen my way from first to last,
From infancy to womanhood.

And now, as year by year goes by,
I find some turning point I sought;
Afar I see the shadows lie,
The mist of doubt, the maze of thought.

As one who walks in dreamy wood,
With mind intent while wholly free,
I gather here and there the good,
Or that which seemeth good to me.

Bewildering doubt! pray let me rest,
Since I so far this way have come;
Henceforth O may I be more blest,
And see the steady light of home.

THY NEIGHBOR AS THYSELF.

O brother man! fold to thy heart thy brother!
Where pity dwells, the peace of God is there;
To worship rightly is to love each other—
Each smile a hymn, each kindly deed a prayer.

Follow with reverent steps the great example
Of Him whose holy work was doing good;
So shall the wide earth seem our Father's temple,
Each loving life a psalm of gratitude.

M. TULLII CICERONIS

DE SENECTUTE

AD T. POMPONIUM ATTICUM.

I. O TITE, si quid te adjuero curamve levasso,
Quae nunc te coquit et versat in pectore fixa,
Ecquid erit praemi?

Licet enim mihi versibus iisdem affari te, Attice, quibus affatur Flamininum

Ille vir haud magna cum re, sed plenus fidei:

quamquam certo scio, non, ut Flamininum,

Sollicitari te, Tite, sic noctesque diesque;

novi enim moderationem animi tui et aequitatem, teque non cognomen solum Athenis deportasse, sed humanitatem et prudentiam intelligo. Et tamen te suspicor iisdem rebus, quibus me ipsum, interdum gravius commoveri; quarum consolatio et major est et in aliud tempus differenda. Nunc autem visum est mihi de senectute aliquid ad te conscribere. Hoc enim onere, quod mihi commune tecum est, aut jam urgentis aut certe adventantis senectutis et te et me ipsum levari volo: etsi te quidem id modice ac sapienter, sicut omnia, et ferre et laturum esse certo scio. Sed mihi, quum de senectute vellem aliquid scribere, tu occurrebas dignus eo munere, quo uterque nostrum communiter uteretur. Mihi quidem ita jucunda hujus libri confectio fuit, ut non modo omnes absterserit senectutis molestias, sed effecerit mollem etiam et jucundam senectutem. Numquam igitur laudari satis digne philosophia poterit, cui qui pareat omne tempus aetatis sine molestia possit degere. Sed de ceteris et diximus multa et saepe dicemus: hunc librum ad te de senectute misimus. Omnem autem sermonem tribuimus non Tithono, ut Aristo Ceus, — parum enim esset auctoritatis in fabula, — sed M. Catoni seni, quo majorem auctoritatem haberet oratio: apud quem Laelium et Scipionem facimus admirantes, quod is tam facile senectutem ferat, iisque eum respondentem. Qui si eruditius videbitur disputare quam consuevit ipse in suis libris, attribuito litteris Graecis, quarum constat eum perstudiosum fuisse in senectute. Sed quid opus est plura? Jam enim ipsius Catonis sermo explicabit nostram omnem de senectute sententiam.

II. Scipio. Saepenumero admirari soleo cum hoc C. Laelio quum ceterarum rerum tuam excellentem, M. Cato, perfectamque sapientiam, tum vel maxime quod numquam tibi senectutem gravem esse senserim, quae plerisque senibus sic odiosa est, ut onus se Aetna gravius dicant sustinere.

Cato. Rem haud sane, Scipio et Laeli, difficilem admirari videmini. Quibus enim nihil est in ipsis opis ad bene beateque vivendum, iis omnis aetas gravis est; qui autem omnia bona a se ipsis petunt, iis nihil potest malum videri quod naturae necessitas afferat. Quo in genere est in primis senectus, quam ut adipiscantur omnes optant, eandem accusant adepti: tanta est stultitiae inconstantia atque perversitas. Obrepere aiunt eam citius quam putavissent. Primum, quis coegit eos falsum putare? Qui enim citius adolescentiae senectus, quam pueritiae adolescentia obrepit? Deinde, qui minus gravis esset iis senectus, si octingentesimum annum agerent, quam si octogesi-
